At Greenwich House, 27 Barrow Street, April 16, at 8 P. M., there will be a meeting of retail merchants and their customers, under the auspices of the Federal Food Administration. Butchers, bakers, grocers, and all dealers in foodstuffs in the district between Fourteenth Street and Canal Street, Seventh Avenue and the river, are urged to attend. Mr. Fisk of the Department of Trade Organization will speak. Mr. A. Zampieri will preside.

On April 16 a patriotic meeting will be held at Public School 36, the Unionport School, 1,070 Castle Hill Avenue, the Bronx, to promote the sale of Liberty Loan bonds. The Mothers' Circle of the school will present a service flag containing seventy-two stars. Special invitation to be present is given through the press to the parents of the graduates of the Unionport School who are in the service. The school completed its membership in the Junior Red Cross last week and received the certificate of membership without holding an entertainment or a fair in order to raise the necessary money. Since Dec. 1, 1917, the pupils of the school have used $108 worth of yarn in knitting sweaters, &c., for the Red Cross.

A service flag with seventy stars representing graduates of Public School 58, on West Fifty-second Street, in the Federal service was presented at the school Friday night. In making the presentation speech, Alderman Charles A. McManus, himself a graduate of the school, referred to the present world conflict as "a children's war," since the rising generation will be primarily affected by its result. He called upon every one to unite in the winning of "the most glorious cause men ever fought for."

SILKS

Foulards, Taffetas, Satins, Crepes de Chine claim your attention by virtue of their judicious prices.

Foulards, $1.48 Yd.: Mere reiteration will not convey the charm of this responsible silk. You will have to see it. Daring and sedate designs. Black and white, navy and white, copen and white variously combined. Sometimes the ground is copen, sometimes navy and sometimes black. Then the figure dances over it in a contrasting tone.

Satins, $1.35 Yd.: So varied that pages would be required to tell you of them. You might as well try to describe a rainbow!

Crepe de Chine: Soft as a whisper and lovely as a flower are these indescribably beautiful fabrics.

Gingham Silks, $1.85 Yd.: A wonderful assortment of gingham designs, also checks and squares. Ideally suitable for cool summer dresses.

$79,536 in Fine Wilton Carpets to Go for $45,968

A Total Saving of $33,568

AN EXTRAORDINARY SALE

The largest carpet mill in the country decided to economize and cut down manufacturing cost by reducing the line of patterns. This remarkable purchase is the result of that decision. It turned to us to relieve it of the seasonable wanted carpets. Our known policy of quick ready cash was also a factor. The mill wanted to close the deal at once. We believe this to be consummated in this city for many years. Of more than usual significance now that so many mills are being closed down. The Carpets are made of the best quality worsted yarn, and are exceptional for the quality of dyes and beauty of designs.

Many Persian effects, some Chinese, but most of the designs are the small allover Persian patterns so well suited to the Wilton Carpet. Quantities of certain designs are very large, so that it is possible to carpet large buildings from selections made here.

All Home Lovers, Hotel Proprietors, Boarding House Managers, are counselled to take immediate action on the event, as the savings are such that the merchandise will sell quickly.

You Saw Him, Boy and Man, and Now a Soldier

So Buy a Bond and Get Behind Him.

You know hundreds of the boys who have gone to the front. They grew up around you with never a thought of war.

Bill Jones, Tim Egan, Tom Smith, Morris Cohen, Tony Bellito—all played baseball in the vacant lots at the foot of the street. They went to the old schoolhouse two blocks north, and sweet-faced Miss Joyce the principal, called them "her boys."

How You Envied Them.

You watched them in the cool of the evening and envied the glow of health upon their cheeks and the joy of living in their merry eyes.

Why, it seems only yesterday that Bill went down town to learn the printer's trade and Tim took a job as shipping clerk in the button factory.

Tony started in to help his father in the barber shop and Morris told Miss Joyce that his uncle intended to take him into his office after the Christmas holidays. Tom, you remember, had an ambition to get into the Fire Department.

Soldier Boys Now.

Well, they're all in uniform now. You yelled yourself hoarse as you watched them swing down the avenue a few weeks ago, and once more you envied them.

"If I were only young again," you sighed.

Today they are in France trained to the hour, ready even for "the last full measure of devotion."

Lend Them a Hand.

They face the Hun and all the abhorrent things he stands for. They are fighting for you, for your boys and girls, for your homes. Will you lend them a hand?

OF COURSE YOU WILL!

Buy Bonds and Help Them

"What can I do to help them?" you ask.

Buy a Liberty Bond. Even one $50.00 bond will be a tremendous help to them.

Turn your pockets inside out—dump your all to help the boys you know and the million other boys fighting with them.

If you stop to think how little your money will be worth with the Kaiser in Uncle Sam's place you'll invest your last dollar in Liberty Bonds.

The Women's Liberty Loan Committee has a booth on our Main Floor, 34th St., where representatives will take subscriptions and answer questions pertaining to the Third Liberty Loan.

FOCH'S REINFORCEMENTS.

Field Marshal HAIG's special order of the day to "All Ranks of the British Army in France and Flanders" presaged a great counteroffensive by the Allied armies under the direction and leadership of General FOCH. The hour has struck for it, whether his preparations are complete or not. A decision is to be sought—there is no alternative. The enemy must be prevented from seizing the railway lines in the rear of the British front from Ypres southwest, or General HAIG's army may find itself in a desperate situation.

A line drawn directly south of Ypres passes twelve miles east of Merville, which the Germans took on Thursday last. Seven miles west of Merville is Thiennes, on the railroad that runs northeast to Hazebrouck, seven miles, and thence to Poperinghe, where it turns due east to Ypres. The line is a feeder for reinforcements and munitions for the British Army. An advance by the Germans from Merville can be powerfully contested, however. A branch railroad runs down through the Forest of Nieppe from Hazebrouck, and Merville is also accessible by rail from the southwest. It would be remarkable if the Germans were not held at Merville, for some days at least. But Armentières, now in German hands, has railroad connection with Hazebrouck. The line passes a little south of Bailleul, an objective of the enemy. Bailleul lies ten miles to the northeast of Merville. At all hazards he must be fended off from the invaluable Hazebrouck-Ypres railroad. But he is attacking at different points of his advance with many divisions. The time had come for General HAIG's special order to hearten and encourage his hard-pressed troops. They must hold "to the last man," for FOCH is coming. "The French Army," says General HAIG, "is moving rapidly and in great force to our support."

The announcement is official. We now know that there is a reserve army, or an army of manoeuvre. The men who held on at Lucknow and at the First Ypres (in October, 1914) will never let go when FOCH is marching to their relief, or making a diversion to relieve the pressure on the British in the north. Only overwhelming forces could crush British resistance, but "the French Army is moving rapidly and in great force" to be thrown against the enemy's front or flank. General HAIG's special order is no doubt well timed. The German armies are now to deal with a great movement of effectives launched by the soldier who saved France on the banks of the Marne.

Probably General FOCH's Reserve Army has been modeled on that of Marshal JOFFRE, which was known as the 6th Army. Ten days before the battle of the Marne opened, and while the Allied armies were still falling back before the impetuous German advance, Marshal JOFFRE announced in a general order:

> In the region of Amiens a new group will be created, made up of units brought by rail, (7th Corps, four reserve divisions, and possibly another army corps of the first line,) to assemble between Aug. 27 and Sept. 2. This force will be ready to take the offensive on the general line St. Pol-Arras, or Arras-Bapaume.

Major F. E. WHITTON of the British Army, in his book "The Marne Campaign," says of this order that it "contained the germ of the dispositions from which grew the battle of the Marne." But the Marshal was wrong in his calculation about the progress of VON KLUCK's army. The nucleus of the French Reserve Army, the 7th Corps, never reached Amiens, because the "drive" of the Germans carried them past the line of St. Pol-Arras-Bapaume first. It was necessary to defer the counteroffensive—to make other preparations for it. The time came when VON KLUCK marched down across the front of the British Army, which he believed was hors de combat. Thereupon Marshal JOFFRE issued his famous order for attack beginning: "Advantage must be taken of the risky situation of the German 1st Army to concentrate against it the efforts of the Allied armies on our extreme left." In that order he said: "All the available forces of the 6th Army northeast of Meaux are to be ready to cross the Ourcq between Lizy and May-en-Multien, in the general direction of Chateau Thierry."

It may be conjectured that General FOCH's Army of Manoeuvre, which seemed to be a myth, has been assembled from various commands and held at Amiens, or at some other point of vantage, to strike at a vulnerable part of the German advance when the time was ripe. In war, however, a strategist cannot always find his opportunity and seize it. In this case General FOCH's hand may have been forced and he has no choice but to go to the relief of the British Army beaten back by greatly superior weight of men and metal. The revelation will soon be made.

The shadow of a great event is cast across the battlefield. A more stupendous conflict than that of the Marne will follow. The result of it should be awaited with quiet confidence, for the finesse of FOCH triumphed when the Allied armies were in more desperate straits than is the case today. The worst to be feared, probably, is a drawn battle with a return to trench-fighting and postponement of a decision until strong American reinforcements reach France.

GOOD NEWS OF THE LOAN.

There could be no better Liberty Loan news than that Oregon and Iowa, two farmer States, led all the others in filling their quota of Liberty bond subscriptions. The surprise is all the greater because it follows a formal statement by the Liberty Loan Committee of the Chicago district that the farmers generally were Liberty Loan slackers. Chicago apparently had not awakened to the fact that the reaction to this loan is different from the reception of the two which preceded it. There are no better soldiers than the men from the land, and those who have gone forward to the trenches will be heartened by the fact that home money supports them on the "frontier of freedom."

These conditions ought rather to have been expected. The banks of the farming States are bursting with the money paid for farm products by the cities, and the resources of the money centres are depicted by the same conditions which put the farmers in funds with which to express their patriotism. New York is keeping up its record for leadership and is supplying, as usual, something like its usual half of the country's total. But other large centres are finding the pace too trying for them. All the cities which have won honor flags for filling their quota are in the class below 250,000 population. The total on Saturday of $600,000,000 in six days is a substantial promise for the minimum wanted, $3,000,000,000, and the acceleration habitual in the later days is an equally good promise for oversubscription to the limit the law allows, $4,461,000,000.

When the first loan was issued it was said that the bonds would sell themselves, and there was disappointment when it was found necessary to make an effort to float them. The surprise now is that the country has been educated up to the point of being prompt and forward with its subscriptions. Now the interior is leading the country in general, New York excepted. We are hearing from the prairies and "the coast" the most encouraging news regarding the new spirit in the land. Let the farmers keep up their good work and confound those who aspersed them. They will not find the cities behind them. Individual subscriptions here are double the number before. Mr. GOMPERS, President of the Federation of Labor, exhorts the wage earners: "Workers of America—you have as much, if not more at stake than other groups of citizens. You are urged to subscribe as generously to this loan as is within your power." That appeal might be made equally to all other groups. No group has any less interest than any other. The appeal and the response are both universal, as they should be.

OLD AND NEW.

Great is Virtue, and occasionally it prevails. The Direct Primary Repeal bill was decently inurned at Albany last week by Senator BROWN. "A large majority of the Senators," he says, tell him privately that they believe the State Convention should be restored, but he found that the bill to restore it wouldn't pass. Governor WHITMAN, mighty to sign or veto, the cornucopia of offices, the prop of prohibition, the Favorite Child of the Direct Primary, clings and cleaves to it. It is more than the Palladium of our Liberties. It is a nomination mill that has turned out and will again turn out one bright and venerable name: For Governor, CHARLES S. WHITMAN.

Therefore, the Direct Primary Repeal bill died. Therefore, the State Convention shall not be again.

"We reaffirm our declaration in the platform of 1912 in favor of the retention of the State Convention, and the direct election of such delegates to such conventions, with the right of party electors to directly express their preference for nominations for State officers if they so desire."

From what fossil-paved cave of hunkerism comes this cry? From the New York Republican platform of 1914, a platform that must have had heroic merit, for Mr. CHARLES S. WHITMAN ran for Governor on it.

FALL OF THE HOUSE OF SHAM.

Kaiser KARL's confession that there was no occasion for the war, contained by plain implication in his letter to Prince SIXTUS, goes a good deal further than the admission that Austria had no right to make the demands she did on Serbia. It goes so far as to admit that by rights it should have been Serbia which made demands on Austria. All this is by implication, but is none the less clear.

It is satisfaction of Serbia's wrongs that KARL proposes. He does not merely propose to undo the wrongs inflicted by war, but anterior wrongs, the wrongs of peace. He proposes to "re-establish Serbia in her sovereignty," thus undoing the work of war; but he then goes on: "We are ready to assure her equitable, natural access to the Adriatic, and also wide economic concessions in Austria-Hungary." This is a confession that Serbia should have these things; a beginner in the study of the war, judging from this letter alone, would surely conclude that it was Austria's refusal to grant them which had brought on the war, and yet Serbia has made no such demand. No clearer proof could be had that the attack on Serbia was a wanton outrage, that Serbia was made the pretext of a war already determined on.

In return Kaiser KARL asks only that Serbia shall suppress anti-Austrian political societies, especially the one called Narodni Ochrana. This was one of the demands made in the famous ultimatum delivered by Austria on July 24, 1914, and the only one of all those demands which the Austrian Kaiser still held to be a justified one in his letter to Prince SIXTUS. And this demand the Serbian Government agreed to, in its reply to the ultimatum on July 27, 1914, saying:

> • • • The Royal Government will accept the demand of the Imperial and Royal Government and will dissolve the Narodni Ochrana Society and every other society which may be directing its efforts against Austria-Hungary.

This, be it repeated, is the only demand made by Austria on Serbia which the Austrian Kaiser finds tenable after two years and a half of war. What did Austria say when Serbia replied accepting this one tenable demand and most of the others? On July 28, the day following Serbia's answer, Austria took notice of it in the following terms:

> The Royal Government of Serbia not having given a satisfactory reply to the note presented to it by the Austro-Hungarian Minister in Belgrade on July 23, 1914, the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary finds it necessary itself to safeguard its rights and interests and to have recourse for this purpose to force of arms. Austria-Hungary, therefore, considers itself from this moment in a state of war with Serbia.

She found it "necessary to safeguard her rights and interests" by plunging the world into war because of Serbia's reply to her ultimatum. What did she demand, and what did Serbia refuse? She demanded that Serbia agree in advance to dismiss "all officers and functionaries," civil or military, whom Austria should name for such dismissal. Serbia agreed to this, on condition that it should apply only to officials who were proved to have plotted against Austria. This condition was "not satisfactory" to Austria in 1914; she considered it a cause of war. In 1917 Kaiser KARL confesses that it was not a cause of war.

In addition to demanding this privilege of controlling Serbia's civil and military administration, Austria demanded that Austrian officials should enter Serbian soil for the purpose of stamping out anti-Austrian propaganda, and should be received as joint authorities with the Serbian officials in these legal proceedings. Even to this Serbia assented, on condition that these Austrian officials should proceed only in accordance with the principles of international law, with criminal procedure, and with good, neighborly relations." This condition was "not satisfactory" to Austria in 1914; it was a cause of war. In 1917 Kaiser KARL confesses that it was not a cause of war.

Austria further demanded that "delegates of the Austro-Hungarian Government" should be members of the tribunals sitting on Serbian soil to try persons suspected of participation in the Serajevo conspiracy. Serbia refused this demand, "as it would be a violation of the Constitution and of the law of criminal procedure." This refusal Austria, in 1914, regarded as a cause of war. In 1917 Kaiser KARL confesses that it was not a cause of war.

Austria demanded that two individuals be arrested. Serbia replied that one of them had been arrested and that the other was in Austria-Hungary, in the employ of the Directorate of Railways. Austria demanded that Serbia prohibit illicit traffic in arms across the frontier; Serbia agreed. Austria demanded that Serbia explain the anti-Austrian utterances of officials whom she did not name; Serbia replied that if Austria would tell her who they were she would do as requested.

All these demands, those which were rejected, those which were accepted wholly, and those which were accepted conditionally, seem to Kaiser KARL in 1917 as empty and frivolous as they seemed to the whole world in 1914. To him, in 1917, Austria has only one thing to ask of Serbia, the suppression of anti-Austrian propaganda, and that was a demand to which Serbia agreed in 1914.

No wonder, holding this contemptuous view of the trumped-up demands of 1914, Kaiser KARL is glad in 1917 to be able to call this a war "for which no responsibility can fall on me." On whom does it fall? On his predecessor, the aged FRANZ JOSEF? We might believe that, possibly, if we had never heard of the conference at Potsdam on July 5, 1914, at which not Austrian but German swashbucklers decided that the time had come to set the world aflame and concocted the preposterous pretense that the assassination of Serajevo was the reason for it. There followed, on July 23, that series of demands on Serbia, and Austria's pretended discovery that Serbia's conciliatory reply made it necessary for Austria "to safeguard its rights and interests and to have recourse for this purpose to force of arms." Did ever an edifice of sham fall to pieces so quickly, and did anybody expect, when it was solemnly raised in 1914, that an Austrian hand, the hand of an Austrian Kaiser, would destroy its flimsy foundations before the war was over?

THE IRISH CONVENTION.

"Would it be too much to hope," Mr. LLOYD GEORGE wrote Mr. JOHN REDMOND in May, 1917, "that Irishmen of all creeds and parties might meet in convention for the purpose of drafting a Constitution which will secure a just balance of all opposing interests, and finally compose the unhappy discords which so long have distracted Ireland and impeded its harmonious development?" Mr. REDMOND and his Nationalist colleagues in Parliament recommended the proposal for such an Irish Convention on condition that it be called at once and that it be representative of Irishmen of all creeds, interests, and parties."

The Sinn Feiners chose to abstain from the convention. Although their ostensible object, or that of their extremist leaders, is Irish independence, a republic, grotesquely initiated or attempted under German auspices, it is not, at least it was not, to be assumed that a reasonable measure of Home Rule would not content them. Amid much violence of language, capable of large discount if democratic political experience is not at fault, amid various usually minor violences of fact and a deal of gesture and parade, the Sinn Feinere have been watching the convention carefully.

Let us separate and abstract, for the moment, the immediate temporary matter of conscription from the work of the convention, which sought a permanent settlement of the age-long "Irish question." Sir HORACE PLUNKETT, Chairman of the convention, who has done at least as much for Ireland as anybody of this generation, tells us that, although the convention failed to agree, although Ulster, as was her right and habit, was recalcitrant, although there was a sharp split as to control of the customs, yet "a larger measure of agreement has been reached upon the principle and details of self-government than has yet been attained." There was more patience, there was more of a spirit of concession, of compromise, of moderation, than could have been expected, in view of the keen political, economic, and sectional differences. Religious differences are perhaps of much less moment in modern Ireland than is generally supposed.

No trace in the convention of the ardency and combativeness of Irishmen, of their "wrong-headedness" and "obstinacy," if those highly human characteristics are not assigned to them in excess, in part by legend, in part by observers quite as obstinate and wrong-headed. The majority of the Nationalists, the whole Southern Unionist delegation, five out of seven of the Labor representatives, agreed upon a plan of government, and the plan of the Nationalist minority varies on only a single considerable detail. There is to be a Parliament of two houses, with an Executive responsible to it, clothed with full powers over internal legislation, administration, and direct taxation. Fiscal independence, through a separate customs and excise, was advocated by the Nationalists, on sound grounds, especially if the Dominions are the right model of an Irish Government. Ulster and the Southern Unionists opposed. The Nationalists offered free trade between the two countries. The customs question became a cardinal question. Without fiscal independence it was feared that Irish popular opinion would be averse to the convention's plan. Mr. GEORGE RUSSELL, poet, prosist, economist, and one knows not how many other facets of distinction, resigned from the convention on account of the defeat of the separate customs and excise plan. Decision is postponed, and meanwhile the Imperial Parliament is to control those taxes, which, however, must go into the Irish Exchequer. The Nationalists have kindly guaranteed to the Unionists 40 per cent. of the membership of the Irish Parliament, which is to elect the Irish representatives in the Parliament at Westminster.

The majority report and plan, indeed, the minority reports and plans, are singularly acute, the work of political thinkers and practical men who would honor any Parliament, any country. If Irishmen still disagree, they seem nearer agreement than ever before. How far the amiability of the convention concurs with prevailing popular opinion is another matter. It remains the fashion to belabor the English because the Irish can't decide what sort of government they want.

THE INCOME TAX AND PRIVATE CONDUCT.

The Internal Revenue Commissioner has decided that a man who supports his wife but does not live with her is not entitled to any exemption either as a married man or the head of a family unless she is in an asylum or a sanitarium. The exception seems to make clear the meaning of the decision, which is otherwise incomprehensible. It is a decision which gives the income tax law a moral if not sanctimonious twist.

The only reason for exempting a certain part of the income of a "head of a family" is that, as he is handing out money for the support of others, his income is not actually the same as that of a single man with no dependents. The exemption is intended to equalize their positions. But now comes the Internal Revenue Commissioner and holds that if the "head of a family" is so disagreeable that his wife won't live with him, he must be penalized for that disagreeableness to the extent of $1,000. Of course, the Commissioner does not put it in that way, but there is no other possible reason for the decision. If a man spends a certain amount of money annually for the support of his wife, what difference does it make whether she lives in the same house with him or in another house? The fact of his spending it is what differentiates him from the single men and gives him the exemption. The Commissioner now destroys that difference, and we can imagine no reason for his action except that he disapproves of disunited families and seizes upon the income tax law as a means of punishing those husbands who don't get along well with their wives.

This conclusion is made certain by the fact that he makes an exception to his ruling. He excepts those husbands whose wives are in asylums or sanitariums. The meaning is obvious; in such cases the separation can be no fault of the husband's. Therefore the Commissioner magnanimously excepts him. If this is not an attempt to warp a fiscal law into a moral and penal one and use it for purposes for which it was never intended, it would be difficult to guess how it can be described.

MAIL FOR THE TROOPS.

Service Found to be Both Prompt and Efficient.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES of Thursday it was stated that there is constant complaint on both sides of the water with respect to the mail service to and from the men in the American Expeditionary Force in France, it being intimated that there is no apparent disposition on the part of the military authorities to facilitate "a fairly frequent exchange of information as to individual conditions and fortunes." I can scarcely believe that such belief is either general or in any event well founded. My experience cannot be exceptional and is exactly the reverse of what is contained in that article.

My son left for France as a private in the Signal Corps Oct. 31, 1917; on arrival was assigned to a telegraph battalion, and reached his destination Nov. 28. For the next three months this battalion was engaged in telephone construction work in back of the lines and was constantly on the move from village to village. Yet, as he says, in a recent letter, "whether I am on the road one week and in the billets the next, it makes no difference, the mail always follows me up and gets me in the end." He received his first letter from home Dec. 15, less than seven weeks after his departure for France, this initial delay being undoubtedly due to the fact that prior to Nov. 28 he was on his way to his destination, with no definite military address. His last letter to me was dated March 22, 1918, and was received by me April 11, and in that letter he acknowledged the receipt of the eighteenth letter of my series, dated Feb. 17.

Letters and packages reach him from us and other relatives in England with but little delay. There was but one package, and that a Christmas package, that was really slow in arriving, not reaching him until March 12, but this is but another evidence of the care exercised in the delivery of soldiers' mail, for, quoting again from his letter, "the box was literally blue with stamped addresses, crossed out addresses, new ones put on, and such phrases as 'try P. O.,' 'try Tel. Bu.,' &c. Secure as you packed up the box, it was repacked at the General Post Office, otherwise I would never have gotten it. As for packages being tampered, that is some more of the German propaganda campaign, for as far as my box was concerned everything was intact."

To my mind such delay as may have occurred to the mails is due to two causes, both inevitable.

First, as to mail to soldiers. Each letter to a soldier bears only particulars of his military unit, and it should be easy to visualize the labor involved in sorting and readdressing, even if only by military units, the volume forwarded to our soldiers.

Secondly, as to mail from soldiers. Each soldier's letter has to be read and passed as censored by his superior officer, and the numerous letters to be so handled unquestionably delay their delivery to the mails.

Notwithstanding the above causes for delay, on several occasions I have received letters from my son fifteen days after the date they were written, and I welcome this opportunity to express my deep gratitude and indebtedness to the personnel of the Post Office abroad through whose fidelity to duty his mother and I have kept in such close touch with our boy. THE CALL TO IRELAND.

The Civilized World Summons Her to Do Her Utmost in This Struggle.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The public owes at all times gratitude to the press where it is conducted with honest, patriotic, and fearless purpose, and it is the reader's privilege sometimes to declare that debt. Will you therefore let me thank you for your admirable editorial article in yesterday's issue of your paper entitled "Conscription in Ireland"? Would that other American papers would speak out about this question in as clear and courageous words as yours!

Too long has the "Irish vote" been reckoned with in American public life. And what does it mean when we speak of the "Irish vote"? Exactly the same thing as when we speak of the German-American vote—i. e., a recognition that we are dealing with people who have not become thorough Americans.

It is to our great honor—and we may well feel pride in the fact—that the draft law has worked with such perfect smoothness throughout our wide land, and in our crowded cities full of aliens. Americans have recognized intelligently the vital need imposed upon them. We see the hideous struggle the world is now engaged in, in its true aspect, and we know, all of us of Anglo-Saxon, of French, of Dutch, of Italian, of Irish, and, let me add, of German blood, that only if we stand shoulder to shoulder with our allies can the enemy be defeated. It is the struggle between good and evil—and for Americans a crusade if ever there was one.

Will Ireland, if she has sons who still can help in this struggle, stand aside? Will she let ancient wrongs and rancours, cherished resentments, hold her hand now, when the whole civilized world calls to her, "Help us, Ireland, in this critical hour; send men to fill the ranks of your brave soldiers who have already given their lives to this great cause; your own son, Lord Roberts, beckons to you to come"?

Speak out, Americans; tell the Irish you know the truth, bid them "come in," bid them join us all, lest, when the war ends, Ireland, in the averted glance of the mourner, whose son has fallen on the field of honor, should see the scorn. SARA NORTON.

German Study in Allied Countries.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Philander P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, continues his plea for the study of German. This is to be expected from a pacifist whose utterances are almost inveriably of a nature to please the boches and their friends. I should like, however, to object to his repeated statement that in France the teaching of German is receiving more attention than ever before. He makes a similar statement about England. Now, I doubt the truth of this statement for England, while for France I proclaim it absolutely and cruelly false. I have recently come from there and took pains to inquire about the effect of the war on the study of German in France. The study has undergone such a decrease that in many places it has disappeared entirely. It has gained nowhere, unless possibly in the military schools, which I did not visit.

Changes in the Russian Language.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Heaven knows, the number of offenses for which both autocratic and revolutionary Russia will have to answer before the court of history is big enough and there is no need to augment it by alleged sins against the Russian language. A TIMES correspondent is all wrong in stating that neither part of the word Petrograd is Russian. "Petro" is the connective form of the good Russian word Petr. As to "grad," we have the name of a Russian city, Elizabethgrad; also the capital of a Slavic country, Belgrad. As to the hissing consonants retained by the Bolsheviki, the fault, if fault there be, is not with the letters, but with the peculiarity of the language itself. It is manifestly much simpler to have one letter to express a given consonant than a combination of letters.

Shortage of Nurses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In view of the headline query "Is There a Shortage of Nurses?" in yesterday's TIMES and the contradictory and strange statements of various hospital authorities quoted, permit me to give you the following extract from the report of Overlook Hospital in this city for March. "Being in need of a nurse for a special case, the Superintendent called up seventeen nurses on her list and four registries, and there was not one to be had." Yet Summit is one of the most healthful towns in the United States. As regards pupils, we have not only need but room, in a most attractive situation, and with an able corps of instructors, for a dozen intelligent young women as pupils in our training school. The course is for two years and three months.

America and Italy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There can be no question that the American people have failed to appreciate in many respects the influence of Italy in this war and the noble efforts she is making to help her allies. That her people have been grossly deceived by the Germans should be properly understood in this country, and the antidote to administer is, as a correspondent suggests, a counterpropaganda. In New York alone there are many commercial, political, and social organizations, all founded by loyal italians, with which it should be easy to co-operate in any plan tending to the education of the Italian people wherever they are to be found.

LEND A HAND.

April music in the air,
Do you hear?
Blossoms bursting everywhere,
Far and near.
Song of birds upon the wing,
Every bud, each living thing,
Tells of hope and life and Spring,
Over here.

Bombs are bursting "Over There,"
Don't you hear?
Death is lurking everywhere,
Ever near.
Wallowing in slime and mud,
Tortured by the grime and blood,
Gallant lads are there today,
Lads who laughed but yesterday,
Over here.

Maybe it's your boy and mine,
Fighting in your fight and mine!
Will you sit at ease, or whine,
Over here?

Are you coward, traitor, slacker?
God forbid! Then be a backer!
Back that boy of yours and mine,
Lend a hand, and get in line,
Buy a bond, and swell the line!
Buy a bond!

Will you leave him in the trench,
With his poison gas and stench,
With the wounds that drip and drench?
Lend a hand!
Lend a hand and lift him out!
Help him put the foe to rout!
He can do it—never doubt,
Lend a hand!

By that consecrated sod,
That those hero lads have trod,
Where they went to meet their God,
Lend a hand!
Lend a hand, and never cease,
Till with Victory comes Peace.
Forward! Haste this glad release,
Buy a bond!

VILDA S. OWENS.

QUESTIONS RAISED BY DR. FRANCKE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When I saw a letter signed by Professor Francke in your issue of April 10 answering the question, "Where do you stand?" I hoped for an expression of a fresh point of view on his part, not necessarily repentant, but a view which would recognize open-heartedly the justice of our cause. But, in expecting that, I was disappointed.

His letter seemed to me only another subtle form of whitewashing Germany, at which Professor Francke is a past master.

First he casts doubts upon the honesty of our Government as to its purpose of going into the war, when he says:

> I have now come to believe that the participation of the United States in this war, provided the unselfish principles enunciated by President Wilson are strictly adhered to, will eventually make for a peace more democratic, equitable, and permanent than would otherwise have been the case.

Then, not satisfied with doubting the honest intentions of the President and Government, he next makes insinuations against our allies:

> Sadly, therefore, but unreservedly, I accept the fact that Germany for the time being is my country's enemy, and I am determined to uphold our Government in its policy of forcing Germany, and, for that matter, all the other belligerents, to accept a peace which will indeed make the world safe for democracy.

What right have we to force our allies, who have so nobly end at such bloody cost withstood the Hun these last three years and more without our aid—what right have we to speak of peace, and who but a German sympathizer would wish to infer that the peace our allies are fighting for is an unjust one?

Another sign of Teutonic sympathy is the frequent use of the two words "peace" and "democracy." We know where most of the talk of peace comes from; and as for Mr. Francke's views on democracy, let us recall two sentences from his article on the "Political Future of Germany" (no recent as Harper's, September, 1917):

> The carrying out of these reforms will indeed create a new Germany, but I hope and believe that it will not lead to the overthrow of the monarchy.

And again in the same article when he is speaking of the lesser German regal courts:

> Is it probable that they (that is, the courts) will be lightly set aside to make room for unknown and colorless republican functionaries? Is it indeed desirable?

How do these statements agree with the following sentence from THE TIMES letter:

> I thoroughly believe in the ideals of American democracy, and rejoice in our free institutions and the liberal and generous spirit of American life.

Evidently Professor Francke does not wish to share our free institutions with his German brothers!

Professor Francke makes no mention of Germany's misdeeds, has apparently no horror of her atrocities, and calls the events which brought the United States into the war "a tragic chain of circumstances."

Was the Lusitania only a tragic circumstance, and the Zimmermann plot with Mexico, and the numerous other conspiracies which were hatched against us while we were still a friendly nation? All these only tragic circumstances? It is amazing language!

RUTH S. BROOKS.

Bloomington, Ind., April 11, 1918.

"Fanatics."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In his open letter to Mr. Hermann Hagedorn, Dr. Kuno Francke of Harvard University declares unequivocally his allegiance to our Government "in its policy of forcing Germany, and for that matter all the belligerents, to accept a peace which will indeed make the world safe for democracy." His letter bears the impress of character rather than Kultur, and of intellectual candor rather than the familiar evasiveness of Germany's apologists.

Nevertheless, it is difficult to read without a protest Dr. Francke's emphatic disavowal of ultra-Americanism: "I cannot have anything in common with the fanatics who make it their business to inflame the people indiscriminately against Germany and everything German."

After all, it is not American but German fanatics and German propagandists who have really imposed this ban upon Germany and "everything German," and the harm they have tried to do to America is beyond comparison with any wrong that American "fanaticism" can do to Germany. While Dr. Francke may serve his country by an open profession of his allegiance, it is these so-called fanatics who must sweep the country of its nests of German intrigue. The task of doing this, and doing it effectively, calls imperatively for patriots of the extremist type. They and their supporters believe in the suggestion of an ancient writer that "it is by removing ourselves as far as possible from what is wrong that we shall arrive at the means." It is a pity that Dr. Francke does not seem to understand that even loyal and unoffending Americans of German blood are obliged to suffer for the crimes of the German Government.

German Iniquity Revealed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let me thank you most warmly for your very fine editorial article, "Kultur Disbanding," which appears in your issue of today; I think it is one of the best editorials that I have read since the beginning of this war. It is encouraging, in these days that demand so much faith and patience, to see the leaders of public opinion so closely in touch with the sentiments of their readers as to give these sentiments virile and inspiring expression.

But it is, perhaps, even more encouraging to find that American ideals of freedom, of justice, and of right, are beginning to make their appeal to those who, by natural ties of kinship, heredity, and training, might well have been expected to be found on the side of the forces which are now seeking to overthrow these ideals. The words used by your correspondent, Karl Friedrich Brill, "the bestial dishonor and depraved cruelty of that arch criminal across the Atlantic" are significant in their ungestrained contempt, but are, at the sametime, typical of the attitude of the more thoughtful German-Americans in this country. Another of your correspondents, Richard Gotthell, further emphasizes this attitude in the words, "There are some Americans who believe—and I gladly range myself among them—that all the worth and attainment acquired by the German people, and that whatsoever they have accomplished in letters, arts, and the sciences, count for naught when weighed in the balance with the untold evil occasioned by the German Government, together with the German people, in bringing on this war." What a tribute to the American conception of life!

Thanks to such articles and letters, the world is made to realize the menace of German sovereignty in all its naked hideousness. HARRIS PARKER.

A Century for German Recovery.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Professor Kuno Francke, in his letter of April 6, continues to speak for the German system of government. When we make critical examination of values in any subject, it is customary to deduce conclusions from end results. The end result of the German system of government is now in evidence.

Professor Francke holds that it is wrong for us to develop a hatred for everything German. He is quite right about that, but it is the German Government that has destroyed our sense of proportion temporarily. When the unit in consciousness that is comprised in feeling subsides to normal proportions we shall doubtless regret many of our acts in response to feeling, and we shall once more enter into full appreciation of the wonderful German people who are now becoming decomposed because of contact with decadents who are in control of the Government. Nearly two centuries were required for the German people to recover from the effects of their Thirty Years' War, based upon the funny idea that two religions could not exist side by side in the same nation. It will probably require at least a century for the German people to recover from the effects of the present war, based also upon silliness. The remnants of the German people that can be saved will continue to inspire us with their great qualities, and we are to hope that they will choose a form of government that will not again destroy them at some time in the next century.

As to the German Government.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read Mr. Kuno Francke's letter which appeared in a recent issue of your paper and which was copied in The Boston Transcript. I found it very interesting as a study in psychology.

Mr. Francke states, "I thoroughly believe in the ideals of American democracy and rejoice in our free institutions," but he adds: "But I must also recognize that the German system of government has achieved great things in the training of the German people in good citizenship and public service, as well as in raising the level of personal worth and attainment."

What a strange mind! Here is a man who lauds a Government that has trained the Germans to become liars, murderers and outragers of women, to destroy, steal or deface everything they come in contact with. Notwithstanding The Hague agreement, (which they were a party to,) they introduce into war liquid fire and poisonous gases; they make and break the most solemn covenant and term it "a scrap of paper." In fact, this Government he lauds has trained the German mind to believe that every horror and villainy is justified that adds to their chances of dominating the world. P. C. LARKIN.

What Good Thing in Germany?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Kuno Francke appears to view America, his adopted country, from the attitude of the German mind. That is, he sees "that the German system of government has achieved great things," and he thinks that many Americans of German blood "entertain views similar to those which I have [he has] tried to express."

Considering the general status of Germany at the present time, is it not asking rather too much of any Americans, worthy of the name, to put any premium whatever on anything German? No man deserves the title of "fanatic" because he speaks openly with intense and unceasing condemnation of everything which Germany stands for against moral civilization.

The Russian Orthodox Church.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of April 11 I find a letter from J. Dyneley Prince of Columbia University. In it he refers to an editorial article on "The Collapse of the Russian Church," &c.

"The Collapse of the Russian Church"! The dismemberment of the Eastern Holy Orthodox Catholic Church! Nonsense! I, as one of the financial sufferers, glory in the Church's spiritual victory. Today, as the great Mother Church of Christendom, she has been persecuted and robbed by Teutonic influences, the Trotzky and Lenine crowd here and in the Old World, who are the cause of the death of the brave allied soldiers and the magnificent sons of the United States, but she towers up rich and a victor. What has happened? Peter the Great tried to Germanize the Church as he did the State, and did away with the Patriarchate. Now the Patriarchate is restored, and that grand character Tikhon, who was eight years among us in the United States as Bishop and Archbishop, is the Patriarch of Moscow and of all the Slavonian Churches. The "Old Believers" who in millions left the Russian Established Church during Peter's reign have returned to the fold. In every part of the Eastern Holy Orthodox Catholic Church life has been reawakened, unity restored, and spirituality deepened.

One word more. Even in Russia, if the damnable power of the Kaiser should split up every part of it into independent States, yet the Patriarchate would hold the Church together. INGHAM N. W. IRVINE,

Secretary of the Association of the Citizen Clergy of the Eastern Holy Orthodox Catholic Church of America, Inc.

The Times in Italy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Practically all our knowledge here of events is gathered from American papers, among which THE NEW YORK TIMES predominates by about four times over the rest added together. It is a truly remarkable institution, and by far the most educational literature in this camp. True that the news is a month old—a fact of no great importance to us here—but it is real news, facts, conditions as they exist, signs and evidences of national and international situations and tendencies, from which guesses, sometimes intelligent, sometimes not, can be made of what will happen. WON'T SHIP SUPPLIES ON SPECIAL REQUEST

$25,000 FOR NEUILLY FUND

Armenian and Syrian Relief Increased by New Subscriptions Amounting to $122,800.

In answer to many inquiries from persons resident in the territory covered by the Atlantic Division of the American Red Cross, which embraces the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, it was announced at division headquarters, 44 East Twenty-third Street, yesterday that the Government had decided not to permit articles to be shipped to specially designated men and hospitals. To send special supplies to any one person, a particular military division or a hospital in France has been at variance with the policy of the American Red Cross for some time, and the authorities in Washington have placed the ban upon it.

General Pershing expressed a desire a few weeks ago that the friends of soldiers refrain from sending specially designated shipments on the ground that it congested the mails, already overburdened with necessary matter. This doubtless had much to do with the official ruling on the subject. It is now definitely settled that no article may be sent direct to the men in France or Italy, but must go through the regular channels of distribution, the Red Cross.

On the return to this country of Major Grayson M. P. Murphy, former Red Cross Commissioner to France, the subject was brought to his notice. At that time he very lucidly set forth a number of reasons why it was impossible to accept designated shipments. One, and a most important reason, was that it was not provided for in the franchise of the American Red Cross from the French Government.

Only recently St. Luke's Auxiliary made a request to Major H. H. Lyle, formerly on the staff of St. Luke's Hospital, New York City, asking that it be allowed to send supplies direct to Evacuation Hospital 2, of which he is in charge. His reply throws a less official light on this perplexing question. He says in part:

> The Red Cross work has grown to such proportions and its work of supply so important that it has become increasingly difficult for them to carry out special requests. You can see that to be efficient and to live up to good military principles, the Red Cross must send the supplies where they are most needed, whether they belong to a base hospital or to Evacuation Hospital 2.
> When the Red Cross deals with the army it is supposed to show no favors. There is nothing I would like better than to have St. Luke's Auxiliary send everything they make to Evacuation Hospital 2 but I feel that we can work to better advantage if we turn in all to the Red Cross and let them divide it equally. Team play and co-ordination are absolutely essential to succeed. I know that in the end this will be better for all the wounded.

The boys and girls of the Junior Red Cross will all have an opportunity to help in the Third Liberty Loan. Harvey D. Gibson, General Manager of the American Red Cross, commends to the attention of the Junior School Committees a letter now being sent out by Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner of Education for New York; Calvin N. Kendall, Commissioner of Education of New Jersey, and Charles D. Hine, Secretary for the Connecticut State Board of Education, telling how this may be done.

Every child can do his share, the writers assert, for even in homes where English is not spoken, the pupils of foreign birth or parentage have been successful in selling bonds among people of their own tongues. The case of a Polish high school boy is cited in illustration. The boy went out the first noon of the campaign, addressed a crowd of forty or fifty Polish workmen in front of a factory, and sold twenty-three bonds.

Food for France Fund.

The Food for France Fund, 10 East Fifty-eighth Street, of which Miss Carita Spencer is the Chairman, and Alexander J. Hemphill the Treasurer, reports new donations amounting to $425. The following statement is issued by this committee:

> The Food for France Fund is making a special effort to help the tubercular hospitals of France. The only hope for the thousands of tubercular soldiers, many of whom have contracted the disease in the trenches, is fresh air and nourishing food.
> The fund has decided to put much of its energy for the present into helping to overcome the terrible scourge which is overshadowing France. In many of the buildings which have been turned into hospitals for the tubercular soldiers the overcrowding makes recovery almost an impossibility. These patients, needing the nourishing foods suitable to their invalid condition, can only get stewed meats, potatoes, &c., and in many, many cases are too ill to eat such food.
> The fund will provide for these tubercular soldiers, who have given their lives for their country as truly as those killed in battle, nourishing foods that they can eat. In many instances under-nourishment makes their cases hopeless. How many of these stricken soldiers can we save for France? Will you give us the money to buy the life-giving food?

Red Cross in Italy.

One hundred Americans are needed at once by the American Red Cross for ambulance service behind the Italian battle lines, according to a statement issued by Captain George Utassy, who is attached to the permanent Red Cross Commission in Italy.

Captain Utassy was sent here by the commission for the purpose of recruiting these ambulance drivers before the close of April. He has opened recruiting offices at the headquarters of the Atlantic Division, 44 East Twenty-third Street, where applications will be received every day from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M.

"We want men able and willing to withstand the rigors of service in the Alpine Mountains and on the plains behind the lines," said Captain Utassy. "It is a splendid opportunity for men of independent means, over draft age, who are strong and healthy and able to drive automobiles.

"Consideration will be given to men, 25 years or over, who are exempt for minor defects. All cost of equipment and living expenses abroad will be covered by the American Red Cross, and transportation expenses will be paid, if necessary. The minimum period of service is six months with the privilege of re-enlisting at intervals of three months."

American ambulance men are the only representatives of the United States in a military way at the present time. These men rank socially with officers of the Italian Army. They are given officers' quarters and rations and enjoy all the privileges that fall to the lot of Italian army officers.

One hundred Americans are now entering service with the American Ambulance Unit in Italy. They are ministering to the needs of maimed and wounded in General Diaz's army high up on the snow capped Alpine rampart that guards North Italy. This contingent motored from France to the Italian war zone just four days after America declared war against Austria-Hungary.

Captain Utassy, who lives at Cedarhurst, L. I., was recently made administrative officer at Italian Field Headquarters in charge of all ambulance units in Italy.

DRIVE INCREASES NEED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I received by today's French mail the following from Mrs. George T. Maxwell of New York, who went to Paris several months ago to assist the Marquise d'Andigné, President of Le Bien-Etre du Blessé:

> * * * There is a lot of activity to report for the society, and yet no news, except that there is a call from the Government for us to increase our work, or our supplies, because of this dreadful offensive, which, alas! is filling up the cemeteries, as well as the hospitals. This afternoon, for instance, at Mme. d'Andigné's request, a second large shipment goes out this month to the same hospital just back of the lines which is sharing its provisions with a sector so constantly under fire that, while the wounded have to be left there till transportation is found for them, they cannot afford to keep a depot of precious provisions, for fear of waste! And so our depot at —— is called on to help them. Those Ford trucks will be a blessed help when we finally get them going.
> Yesterday and the day before we were bombarded by day and bombarded by night—it only means that we'll all sleep more soundly when we do sleep—and no one cares, except a few cowards we are well rid of, anyway.

By the same mail Mme. Waddington writes with her usual vividness of the bombardment from above. She is living with Marquise de Talleyrand (Elizabeth Curtis) directly at the foot of the Eiffel Tower, which has mounted guns on all its platforms:

> We have been rather [illegible] with the last raids. The last one particularly, when the guns from the Tour Eiffel poured out; as they only fire when the avions are directly over Paris we knew what was before us. The house shook like an earthquake, but no glass was broken. We all went down to the cellar [it is an apartment house.] —— was frightfully nervous, screamed every time a bomb fell. ——'s Italian maid went down on her knees and said her chaplet, and all the rest of the servants had hysterics and rushed about from one corner to another until we suggested to their mistresses that they must calm their women or send them across the street to an "abri." It is curious to see the notices of "abris" all over Paris for 100 persons. I hear they are perfectly safe. My nerves don't take the form of screams, but of course I don't like it any more than any one else.

We have been sending 85,000 francs a month to Le Bien-Etre du Blessé, but whether this new series of battles decides the history of Europe—plus the United States—or settles down into stalemate, we shall need 100,000 francs or more for a good many months.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

A Fund of $100 for a Widow.

Mrs. L. is a widow in the navy yard section of Brooklyn whose husband died suddenly a few months ago. Two of her three children are being cared for away from home, but she says she never will part from her ten-year-old boy, who is a great comfort to her. She has been supporting herself by factory work, but is now at home, expecting to be confined in about a month. The church will pay her rent during her time of need, and the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities plans to grant her a weekly allowance sufficient to cover food, coal, clothing, and other living necessities. Medical aid also will be secured. A fund of at least $100 will be needed for these purposes, and large or small contributions may be mailed to the bureau at 69 Schermerhorn Street, marked "For 0363 T."

COAL SITUATION SERIOUS.

No Progress Being Made Toward Stocking Up for Next Winter.

Although unnoticed by the general consumer, because of the warmer weather, the coal shortage is still a matter that is giving the State and County Fuel Administration much concern. Instead of the bins filling up against the Winter demand as was expected, it is said that desired progress is not being made.

In the trade it is said that the delivery of bituminous coal continues disappointing, principally because of the car shortage. Harry T. Peters, Chairman of the State Coal Conservation Committee, said March was the worst month in the last eighteen in point of bituminous production.

"This," he said, "was due to the great shortage of cars, and it is getting to a point where there will be famine unless something drastic is done. I know of plants which are working from hand to mouth, just as they did last Winter, and now is the time when we should be laying in a stock of coal."

At the office of the State Fuel Administration, 61 Broadway, it was said that the bituminous coal situation was very serious. The same thing was said at the office of Reeve Schley, the County Fuel Administrator, at 65 Broadway.

WANT HIGHWAYS REPAIRED.

Traffic Association Urges That Prisoners Do the Work.

An important meeting of the Highway Traffic Association of the State of New York will be held next Tuesday night at the Automobile Club of America to discuss the urgent need of maintaining road repair at its highest efficiency for prompt transportation of army supplies and foodstuffs. Among the topics to be considered will be the formulation of a definite program by the Secretary of the Treasury for the construction and maintenance of trunk highways, the maintenance by the Government of highways now being used for military purposes, the employment of prisoners of war for labor on the highways taken over by the War Department, and immediate construction of the New York-New Jersey interstate traffic tunnel.

Among the speakers will be S. M. Williams, President of the Highway Industries Association; H. E. Breed, Deputy Highway Commissioner of New York; Commissioner John H. Delaney of Plant and Structures of New York City, John W. Herbert, Chairman of the New Jersey State Highway Commission, and George H. Pride of the Highways Transport Committee.

CARE FOR JEWISH SOLDIERS.

Welfare Board Organizes Community Branches Throughout Country.

To care for the needs of the Jews called in the second draft, the Jewish Welfare Board of the Army and Navy announced yesterday that it had made plans to organize community branches in every city in this country where a large number of Jews would be called in the second draft. At meetings of Jewish drafted men, records of the men in service of the Jewish faith will be compiled with the purpose of obtaining a historical record of the part played by the Jewish race in the war.

Excluding the second draft, it is estimated by Colonel Harry Cutler, Chairman of the Welfare Board, that 60,000 Jews are now serving in the military forces of the United States. It was said yesterday that the Welfare Board, which is co-operating with the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and the Fosdick Commission under the sanction of the War Department in all the cantonments in this country, has more than 100 field representatives.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.

The New York Division of the National Guard Army, now ready for transfer overseas, has a surplus of mascots, according to The Gazette of the 7th Regiment. A soldier correspondent at Camp Wadsworth writes as follows of the mascots of the Empire Division:

> "Personally we have not troubled to conduct a canine census or to check up the number of goats, pigs, chickens, squirrels, monkeys, raccoons and such-like to be found hereabout; but, if you were to ask us for an offhand estimate, we'd tell you without blinking that there are more mascots in Camp Wadsworth than there are animals in Central Park's Zoo.
> "You may squash, slosh, and skid up and down our nice muddy roads until you cast a shoe or stall, and not once will you be able to look round you without seeing at least a few of the aforementioned creatures. You can't get away from 'em. They are everywhere. They seem to us that abide here just as natural a part of every landscape as the trees, the mud, the tents, the cook shacks, and the stables.
> "Dogs predominate. They're of every known breed, color, size, and temperament, too. There are mastiffs, bloodhounds, greyhounds, beagles, setters, bulls, poodles—yes, and some of 'em even wear pink ribbons—terriers and many, many, many, oh, so many, plain mongrel curs. Some of them are honest-to-goodness mascots that were brought here from beyond the 'Smith & Wesson Line,' and they, of course, are petted, pampered, and photographed after the manner of mutts of high station. As for the rest of the pack—well, they just came to us—from nowhere."

A new engineer regiment, the first of the kind ever organized in the history of the army, is now assembling at the Engineer Camp on the racetrack grounds at Laurel, Md. Colonel James F. Bell, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., is in command, and has issued the following statement regarding the requirements and the qualifications necessary in order to be enlisted as a part of its personnel:

> The latest demand from our troops in Europe is for a regiment to maintain and operate the boats and barges on the rivers and canals of France. France has in the Rhone, the Seine, the Loire, and the branches of the Rhine, together with the connecting canals and smaller rivers, probably the most highly developed inland waterway system in the world. Water transportation is popular and is used very extensively. Their system has been for years the best model for study by waterway engineers from all countries.
> To meet the demand for men to maintain and operate vessels on this system of waterways the 57th Engineers is to be assembled and organized at Laurel, Md. This opportunity not only to see and travel on these rivers and canals, but to gain first-hand experience in operating a system that is a model is one that will appeal to many young Americans as well as to those who have had years of experience on our own waterways. They will see here not only an opportunity to serve their country, but an opportunity to serve her in the line in which their experience will make their work most valuable. Bargemen, teamsters, saddlers, sailmakers, riggers, blacksmiths, ship carpenters, steersmen, hoisting engineers, marine gasoline engineers, and a few clerks will be needed.
> The requirements for enlistment are the same as for recruits in general, with the added requirement that men must have experience as outlined above. An applicant should apply for the 57th Engineers (Inland Waterways Regiment) at the nearest recruiting station and give his age, address, trade, and years of experience, with name of present and of a previous employer. Men who are not within the prescribed age limits or who cannot pass the usual physical examination for recruits need not apply. Drafted men may have an opportunity later to transfer to this regiment, but they cannot enlist for it now, and they are requested not to write about it, as no exceptions can be made and no places held open. Enlistments must be made in the grade of private, but as there are thirty men in each company of the grade of Sergeant or above and twenty-nine in the grade of Corporal, the opportunity for promotion will be excellent for good men of experience.
> Recruiting officers have authority to enlist qualified men for this regiment without approval by the Colonel of the regiment. Further information can be obtained, however, by application to Colonel James F. Bell, Engineers, N. A., Laurel, Md.

Brig. Gen. F. W. Sladen, U. S. A., one of the best known of former West Point Commandants of Cadets, is now commanding one of the brigades in the army under General Pershing. General Sladen was Secretary of the General Staff in Washington when ordered to assume his more important duties in France.

That the United States Marines will fight as a division in France is indicated by the fact that the House Committee on Naval Affairs has recommended the appointment of an additional Major General for the corps. The only officer of this rank now in the corps is Major Gen. George Barnett, the commandant. The opinion is general in Washington that the first marine division commander will be either Brig. Gen. Charles A. Doyen, who commanded the first marine regiment ordered to France, or Brig. Gen. John A. Lejeune, the officer who organized the famous marine battle training camp at Quantico, Va.

Major Arthur Adams, O. R. C., in charge of the Inspection Division of the Ordnance Department for the New York district, announces that men between the ages of 40 and 60 years are needed by the Ordnance Department. The men must be mechanical engineers or men who have had chemical experience. They are desired for executive positions which pay from $2,000 to $3,500 a year. This department has charge of all army ordnance manufactured in this part of the country, the inspection territory including more than 150 munition plants. Further information may be had from Major Adams, whose office is in the Albemarle Building, at Broadway and Twenty-fourth Street.

Chaplain Joseph Clemens of the Field Artillery, one of the best known Chaplains in the regular army, has been retired as a result of disability, due to hard service at home and in France. Chaplain Clemens is a native of England and entered the army seventeen years ago.

Another class of assistant paymasters, destined for active service in the fleets, entered the Navy Training School in Washington last Monday. There are about ninety young men in the class, most of them from the enlisted personnel of the navy.

The long trip across the Atlantic, says The Army and Navy Register of Washington, will afford an opportunity for special instruction of troops on their way to France. The school of officers will include recitations held daily in French, instruction in musketry, minor tactics, military courtesy and honors, and field fortifications. There will be an examination held upon completion of each subject. Noncommissioned officers and selected privates will attend school daily and cover the elementary and fundamental parts of all subjects treated in the officers' school. For all officers and men there will be instruction in the order and insignia of rank of the United States, French, and British Armies. An important part of the program on board transports will be the daily exercise of thirty minutes' duration in energetic calisthenics for all officers and men. There will be, in addition, certain special subjects for staff officers.

Three additional flying schools have been approved by the War Department. One will be in California, another in Mississippi, and the third in Georgia. The California school will be a "one unit field," which means that four aero squadrons will be maintained there for instruction.

The Great Lakes Naval Training Station, near Chicago, will honor the memory of all former Great Lakes men who die in the service of the country. The memorial will be placed in the Administration Building. The roll of honor now totals about thirty men who have made the supreme sacrifice.

The 28th Division of the National Guard Army, which is now ready for overseas service, will in the future be known as the Keystone Division. As its new name indicates, the division is that of the Pennsylvania National Guard. The organization is now in camp at Camp Hancock, Ga.

The 59th United States Regiment of Heavy Field Artillery, which is training for overseas duty somewhere in New York, was presented with a handsome stand of colors a few days ago. The donors of the flags were New Yorkers, and the presentation speech was made by United States Senator William M. Calder. The entire regiment, in full equipment, was paraded in honor of the event. Colonel Sydney Grant, U. S. A., the regimental commander, received the colors.

The Fifty-ninth is armed with heavy howitzers, and is made up of one-third regulars and two-thirds National Guardsmen, the latter from New York City. The New Yorkers in the command were drawn from the 13th Coast Artillery Regiment, while the regulars are from forts in and near New York. The three battalion commanders are Lieut. Col. Harry J. Watson, U. S. A.; Lieut. Col. H. H. Pendry, U. S. N. G., and Lieut. Col. William C. Waller, U. S. A.

Colonel Frederick Perkins, U. S. A., until recently in command of a brigade in the national army division at Camp Sherman, Ohio, has been ordered to duty on Governors Island. He has been designated Officer in Charge of Militia Affairs for New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia. This is Colonel Perkins's second assignment to Governors Island, he being a former Assistant Adjutant General of the Eastern Department.

Major Albert T. Rich, U. S. A., who, as a First Lieutenant, organized and subsequently commanded the "model company" of the National Guard of New York, is one of the regular army battalion commanders under General Pershing in France. The "model" company which Major Rich organized came to be known as the best-drilled guard unit in the United States. Major Rich was a regular army inspector on duty in New York when he organized the unit, many of the enlisted men in which have since become officers in the army.

A school for the training of enlisted men for positions as non-commissioned officers has been established at Paris Island, S. C., by the Marine Corps. The course of instruction includes modern bayonet fighting, trench work, the command of small units, and other features of the work which the non-commissioned officer must know in this war.

The champion machine gun unit of the New York Division at Camp Wadsworth is the 1st Platoon of Company D of the 104th Machine Gun Battalion. The second best unit is the 2d Platoon of the same battalion, while the third best is the 1st Platoon of the 105th Battalion.

The camp on the Gettysburg battlefield, where the "tank" units for the overseas forces are in training, has been named Camp Colt, in honor of Samuel Colt, who, eighty-three years ago, patented the army revolver which bears his name. The "tank" training camp is one of the most interesting spots in the United States. Its commander, whose name has not yet been published by the War Department, is one of the best-known engineer officers in the United States Army.

The 30th Division of the army, which is made up of the guardsmen from Tennessee and the Carolinas, is now the "Old Hickory" Division. The reason for the name is given in the following order, issued from the division headquarters at Camp Sevier, S. C.

> 1. The name "Old Hickory Division" is selected from the names suggested for this division, as best exemplifying the sturdy fighting qualities of soldiers from North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee, who comprise the vast majority of the personnel of the division.
> 2. "Old Hickory" was the affectionate nickname of Andrew Jackson, famous American General of the War of 1812. He was born in 1767. While both North and South Carolina claim him as a native son, it is certain that he studied law at Salisbury, N. C., and while yet under twenty years of age he was admitted to the bar as attorney and counselor, and in 1788 he was appointed public prosecutor in the region now forming the State of Tennessee. In 1796 he was elected to Congress, and in 1797 to the United States Senate, from which body he resigned the following year. From 1798 to 1804 he was Judge of the Supreme Courts of Tennessee. He was again elected to the United States Senate from Tennessee in 1823. He was later President of the United States for eight consecutive years.
> 3. His life was a stormy one, but, taken all in all, "Old Hickory" Jackson was one of the most commanding personalities in American history. It is his indomitable fighting qualities, as shown particularly at the battle of New Orleans on Jan. 8, 1815, that this division will emulate. The military history of the ancestors of the soldiers of this division give every reason for the world to expect great things of their sons.
> 4. The Thirtieth Division will accordingly be known hereafter as the "Old Hickory Division."

Buy and Save

Now is the time for action.

We shall fight to the last drop of blood until VICTORY is ours. But dollars save lives and wherever it is possible we shall spend dollars rather than spend blood.

The choice is clear. We can begin to save carefully and intelligently in order to prevent every needless hour of human agony on the fields of France. Or we can continue unnecessary spending and thus handicap the preparations of the Government, prolong the war and endanger the lives of our fighting men.

Enlist your dollars as our soldiers enlist their lives—until the war is won.

No real American will hesitate. We shall save, save more than we ever believed we could save, to invest in Liberty Bonds.

We are united in this purpose but our present savings may not be adequate for the purchase of all the Liberty Bonds our hearts prompt us to buy. To meet this difficulty the great banking system of America, which has been mobilized in support of the Government, offers its help. Every citizen is urged to go to a bank and arrange for the purchase of bonds to be paid for out of future savings.

The undersigned banks who have paid for this advertisement pledge themselves to make to subscribers loans on United States Government Bonds of the Third Liberty Loan for 90 days at 4¼ per cent., the same rate of interest paid by the Government. Such loans will not interfere with any borrower's regular line of credit. We urge every bank in the United States to do likewise.

SUN BRIAR MAY GO IN TWO BIG RACES

Kentucky Derby and Preakness Arranged So Stars May Take Part in Both.

TURF LEADERS IN MARYLAND

Best Animals in Training Already at Havre de Grace for Meeting Which Opens Tuesday.

With the dates announced for the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness, two stake races which promise to establish the three-year-old authority for the season, horsemen of New York are taking even deeper interest in these events. The Derby is to be run at Churchill Downs, Louisville, on May 11, and on May 15 the Preakness is to be decided at the Pimlico course, at Baltimore.

Officials of The Jockey Club tried desperately to arrange the date for the Preakness so that there would be at least a week intervening between the classics of the three-year-old division, but the Louisville leaders refused to budge on their selection of May 11. Since the metropolitan racing season opens at Jamaica on May 16, it was thought impossible to make a satisfactory date for the Preakness at Pimlico, even under the conditions that Pimlico does not close until May 17.

Those deeply interested in the two events, however, feel certain that owners who have their thoroughbreds entered in both events will be able to arrange for the transportation of the animals from Louisville immediately after the running of the Derby and get the animals to Pimlico in time for a workout before the Preakness. If the animals were shipped from Louisville on the night of the Derby they could be in Baltimore easily on Monday, which would give the trainers a chance to prepare the costly animals Tuesday for the race which is to be run on Wednesday, May 15.

Willis Sharpe Kilmer, owner of Sun Briar, the king pin of the two-year-old division last year and now prime favorite for the Derby, has announced that he has completed arrangements for the shipment of this high-class animal from Kentucky. Sun Briar will start in the Derby, and it is almost certain that he will be sent after the Preakness. Escoba, the most promising Western candidate for the three-year-old classics, will get his initial tryouts in the East and will be sent back to Kentucky for the Derby. There is almost a certainty that Escoba, like Sun Briar, will start in both races.

Papp in Preakness Only.

George W. Loft, owner of Papp, Sun Briar's chief rival last season, will not be sent after the Derby, but undoubtedly will go in the Preakness. Mr. Loft conferred with his trainer and tried to make arrangements whereby Papp could have a shot at both races, but it was thought better to reserve the big, handsome three-year-old for the Preakness and not subject him to the hardship of the mile and a quarter trial at Churchill Downs, then the long trip, and the mile and an eighth grind over the Maryland course.

James Rowe, trainer for Harry Payne Whitney, also has advised that Rosie O'Grady, the most promising three-year-old filly, be reserved for the Preakness, notwithstanding that Mr. Whitney has been set upon winning the Derby with Rosie O'Grady and thereby establishing a second filly at the head of the three-year-old division, just as Regret won that honor a few seasons ago. The shorter race for the Preakness is more to the liking of the fillies, since it does not overtax their strength. The colts can travel the filly Derby distance without great danger, but few fillies are built strong enough for such a struggle.

One colt which Regret practically shelved by winning the Kentucky Derby is Exhibitor, now a valuable stallion, in the stables of James Butler. As two-year-olds Pebbles and Regret struggled throughout the year for the leadership of the division and at the finish there was a wide difference of opinion over which was the better. Both wintered well and both started in the Derby, fit for a great race. Regret that day was more fit than any animal which ever won the race, for she went to the front and remained there for the entire distance, winning easily and in record time. Pebbles raced only a few times thereafter and was retired to the stud. He is expected to be a big success as a stallion. Only a few days ago foals arrived at Mr. Butler's Eastview Stud, the get of Pebbles. One was out of Grant, a highly successful filly, another from Little Queen, and one from Tamira.

Luculiite, August Belmont's leading three-year-old, will be sent after the Preakness, but will not run in the Derby. Most of the Eastern horsemen will reserve their thoroughbreds for the Pimlico event, which has a value of $15,000, equal to that of the Derby.

Havre de Grace Meeting Next.

Although adverse weather and the disastrous fire of Friday detracted somewhat from the racing at the Bowie meeting, which finished yesterday, there is every indication that the Havre de Grace meeting, which opens Tuesday, will be a gigantic success. Already there are more than 1,200 thoroughbreds quartered at the Havre de Grace track and they are all ready to play their parts in the racing to be conducted by the Harford Agricultural and Breeding Association.

It seems likely that the Havre de Grace meeting will be the best, as regards quality of animals, that ever has been attempted in Maryland. Despite the poor weather horsemen have had better opportunities for training their thoroughbreds than in years, and consequently the animals are now fit and hardy. Horses, which in ordinary years would not be ready for racing until the last week of May are ready for the bugle right now.

Every one of the leading stables of the country is to be represented at the Havre de Grace meeting, and later at Pimlico. The handicaps at Havre de Grace, and the Wilmington, for three-year-olds, and the Perryville and Aberdeen Stakes for two-year-olds, have attracted practically every star in training.

In the Harford and the Philadelphia and Susquehanna Handicap will be seen such famous runners as Wilfred Viau's champion imported four-year-old Omar Khayyam, last year's Kentucky Derby winner, and his stable companion, Westy Hogan, which beat Omar in the Bowie Cup event last Fall. Besides these two, J. K. L. Ross's $30,000 Cudgel will start, as will J. J. Timmerman's Flittergold and J. F. Sweeney's Hauberk. Other eligibles in training in Maryland and likely to start in the big events are Jack Hare, Jr.; Bondage, Water Lady, St. Isidore, King Neptune, Hendrie, Paddy Whack, and a score of minor stars.

There is another eligible, unknown to fame on this side of the Atlantic, but a runner of renown on the other side, in the stable of Commander Ross. This is Fitzwilliam, a son of William the Third and Ironical. H. G. Bedwell, trainer for Ross, thinks that Fitzwilliam is going to be the sensation of the turf. Fitzwilliam brought $18,000 last Fall. He is an impressive looker.

Wilmington Attracts Good Field.

The Wilmington renewal will be a race of unusual interest this Spring because it bids fair to bring to the post half a dozen or more three-year-olds being prepared for the Preakness and Kentucky Derby. Among the colts and fillies which may start in this fixture are Commander Ross's seven English and Irish runners—Hillhampton, Bonnie Dance, Wigsione, Canso, Foreground, Corn Exchange, and Althea, which cost the Canadian sportsman $96,000 last Fall. Bonnie Dance, the most forward of this lot, if recent work counts for anything, won the Phoenix Park Plate at Dublin last Summer. His purchase price was $20,000. These horses are all good lookers and Bedwell has them in first-rate condition. Among the three-year-olds better known to patrons of American racing engaged to run with these outlanders are Bonnie Broom, Jack Hare, Jr., Nepperhan, Amackassin, Ballast, Fragonard, Papp, K. of K., Mancha, Happy Go Lucky, Cobalt, Muppoorwill, Orlando of Havana, and others.

Harry Payne Whitney seems to have the smartest two-year-olds at the track. His youngsters, all of them home-bred, were prepared for the Havre de Grace races at Benning by Albert Simons, and they came here ready. Among the Whitney bunch there is a half sister of Buskin, a half sister of Bonnie Broom, a half brother of Cobalt, and a half brother of Jacobite and Charles Edward.

Other well-known Eastern and Western horsemen who will show good youngsters at Havre de Grace are Joseph L. Murphy, Samuel D. Riddle, George D. Widener, Walter M. Jeffords, and Joseph E. Widener, all of Philadelphia; Richard T. Wilson, Jr., President of the Saratoga Association; Richard F. Carman, Wilfred Viau, P. A. Clark, C. E. Clement, George Wingfield of Nevada, James W. McClelland, W. R. Coe, Major Gifford A. Cochran, R. O. Eagan of California, Cornelius Fellowes, Lewis Garth, William Garth, John Lumsden, Commander Ross, J. S. Tyree, R. H. McCarter Potter, J. L. Price, Captain Philip Walker, Emil Herz, J. S. Owenby, and Captain W. J. Press.

There will be steeplechasing aplenty at Havre de Grace, and all the clever fencers of the East that are schooling for the Pimlico meeting, which will be marked by the running of a $5,000 Green Spring Valley steeplechase, will be seen. The cross-country course is in beautiful condition, the rains of the last few days having had a particularly stimulating effect on the sod.

Unless the plans of the management are altered the order of the running of the Havre de Grace stakes will be as follows: Harford Handicap, April 19; Wilmington, April 18; Philadelphia Handicap, April 20; Aberdeen, April 22; Penn, April 24; Perryville, April 25; Susequehanna Handicap, April 27, and Chester, April 29.

FORDHAM OUTLOOK BRIGHT.

Track Candidates Found Promising by Coach Wefers.

Although the unusual and severe weather conditions last week temporarily halted the Fordham University track candidates, it is expected that daily outdoor practice will be resumed tomorrow. The Pennsylvania relay races on April 26 and 27 will mark the first outdoor appearance of the Maroons, and Coach Wefers has yet to pick the members of the relay.

He is watching the newcomers, especially with a view to filling the gaps in the squad caused by recent enlistments. Wefers announced yesterday that the final trials would be held on Sunday, April 21, at Travers Island. This will allow the coach a full week in which to speed up the runners for the carnival.

The Spring track schedule is as formidable as in other years, and shows the growth of interest in the sport since Bernie Wefers came to Fordham two years ago. The Bronx collegians are booked for the metropolitan championships at Columbia, and will also be represented in the outdoor intercollegiates. The only dual meet is with City College, but Raymond Mulvihill, the manager, expects to add several more colleges to the list. An interclass meet will be held in May.

Ten candidates are expected to be in the finals. They are Murray, Gough, McKeown, Tackasch, Golden, McGloughlin, Tully, Winters, Donnelly, and Fitzpatrick. Jack Murray, the Maroon Captain; Tackasch, Golden, and Fitzpatrick are "F" men, although Murray and Tackasch are the only ones who ran on the relay team.

The prospects of turning out a good track squad are bright, although a few more men for the field events would lend a better balance to the team. Since the loss of Fetter, who is with the Fordham ambulance unit, Fordham has had few good weight men. The squad is large as track squads go at Fordham. Bernie Wefers personally exhorted a number of the students to report for the practice spins whether they had the intention or the ability to make the team.

BROOKLYN EXHIBIT OPENS WEDNESDAY

Saddle Horses and Jumpers to be Displayed at Show for Red Cross.

Saddle horses and jumpers will be the feature of the Brooklyn Horse Show Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week at the Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn. The event this year is to be for the benefit of the Red Cross, which is expected to attract a larger attendance than in the past.

Especial interest is manifested in the competition for the President's Cup, for saddle horses 15 hands and not exceeding 16 hands. Twenty-two horses have been listed for this event. Miss Eleanor Sears will come from Boston to compete, and a new contestant, C. L. Whiting, has entered from Avon, N. Y. The Misses Helen Leeming, Clara Peck, and Lizbeth Higgins all of Brooklyn, have named "dark" horses for the event.

From Philadelphia there will be Miss Jean Lister Austin, with saddlers and hunters, and Miss Isabella Wanamaker, with harness horses. Mrs. Joseph L. Sylvester of Boston will also contest in the harness classes. Radiant, the chestnut gelding of saddle fame which won the President's Cup and the championship last year, then as the property of W. H. Rhodes of Tenafly, N. J., is to appear again, this time under the ownership of Miss Sears. J. Campbell Thompson, Samuel C. Pirie, John McE. Bowman, Miss Kathleen Kilsy, Miss Austin, Miss Marjorie Beard, (with Jenny,) Miss Maud Hadden, Frank C. B. Page, and Clarence H. Robbins are among those who will try for the first ribbon honors over the jumps.

The array of saddle classes is imposing. Miss Leeming will show her new mount, a bright chestnut gelding, Carry On, (formerly Director,) and Miss Lizbeth Higgins is to present her new Winchester. Miss Peck will bring two "strangers," besides her already familiar Princess Pat, Winona, and a purchase of but a few days ago, Julien Eltinge, a big bay of 16 hands, with white face and feet, announced to have cost $1,500. Other especially noted and promising saddle entries of the four days are:

Miss Eleanor Sears's Radiant and Kingsfoot, Sequatogue Farm's (Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs's) Springtime and Nidalia, Miss Isabella Wanamaker's Cherrystone, Mrs. Joseph L. Sylvester's Gay Field, Miss Florence Baker's Merry Countess, Miss Laura Hulst Murr's Beverly, Miss Dorothy Anderson's Apollo, Miss Jean Lister Austin's MacGregor, Miss Rachael Higgins's Lady Mack, Mrs. W. A. McGibbon's Tiger Rose, Tracy Higgins's Kitty May, Miss Helen Jackson Page's Hazel Young, Mrs. John C. Loud's Blanco, Mrs. Gordon Russell Thyer's Babette, Dean Bedford's Toronto King, Miss Ruth Englis's Little Fan, Miss Mary Grace Rasch's Blue Grass, Jere Collins's Briarbush, Charles C. Stelle's Myron S., Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheimer's Pussy Footer, and J. Campbell Thompson's Nestledown Masterpiece.

Miss Rachael Higgins and Miss Virginia Hanan, with Lady Mack and Kilkee, and Miss Louise Banks Lott and Thomas K. Alford, with Hard Luck and Beowulf, are among those who will contest in the saddle tandems. The harness classes will have among their chief entrants Miss Wanamaker with Suave Eve, Netherhall's Pride and Matchless; Mrs. Joseph L. Sylvester with Excessive and Expressive, and Louis K. Liggett with Joy. Miss Wanamaker has entered Netherhall's Pride for the Brooklyn Eagle Gig Cup valued at $500, "legs" on which have already been won by Joe Harriman of Avondale Farm, John L. Bushnell of Springfield, Ohio; Judge William H. Moore, Mrs. M. Maurice Dimond, and Walter L. Hanley of Providence.

The tandem entries of the show include Mrs. Sylvester's Excessive and Expressive, and Miss Wanamaker's Eve and Netherhall's Pride, and Suave and Matchless. The runabout class is to have in it Louis Liggett's Joy, Miss Baker's Merry Countess, Mrs. Sylvester's Ecstasy, and Miss Wanamaker's Netherhall's Pride.

The combination entries comprise, among others, Miss Baker's Merry Countess, Miss Clara Peck's Allah, Miss Jean Lister Austin's MacGregor, Samuel K. Jacob's Sparkling Mosella, Miss Barbara Guggenhsim's The K'Nut, Franklin B. Jourdan's Aviator, Mrs. John C. Loud's Blanco, and Miss Helen Jackson Page's Hazel Young.

Among the ponies entered are Mr. Liggett's Fulgora, Princess Filango, Trillo Mavell, and Bouncing Bantam; Mrs. Sylvester's Glenavon Victoria, imp.; Mrs. A. B. Moffit's Fireflirt and Fireflame, and J. C. Meem's Jackey. There will be a class for troopers' mounts and another for polo mounts, Captain K. Alford and Major Howard Borden figuring prominently in the latter.

The Red Cross features of the show will be novel and striking. Girls with Red Cross bands on the arms of their habits will sell trifles such as boutonnieres, corsage bouquets, bon bons, and cigarettes and will have charge of a sales table in the club house parlors. Mrs. Leeming, who heads the patroness committee, will have as her aids Mrs. Edwin A. Ames, Mrs. John Anderson, Mrs. Alfred C. Bedford, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. H. Edward Dreier, Mrs. Thomas R. French, Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs, Mrs. Stanley P. Iadwin, Mrs. Darwin R. James, Jr., Mrs. Franklin B. Jourdan, Mrs. F. W. Lafrentz, Mrs. Charles L. Morse, Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Mrs. Hamilton H. Salmon, Mrs. Joseph K. Smith, Miss Josephine H. Sutphin, and Mrs. Alfred T. White. Serving under Mrs. Hubbs of the Sales Committee are to be, among others, Miss Caroline Weber, Mrs. Burnett C. Collins, Mrs. Winthrop Murray Tuttle, Miss Clara Peck, Mrs. John C. Loud, Mrs. Thomas Lonsdale Leeming, Mrs. George Anderson, Mrs. Richard C. Kettles, Jr., Miss Leeming, Miss Marjoris Beard, and Miss Rachael Higgins.

The first roller skating races which have been held in this city in some time will take place at the St. Nicholas Rink on Tuesday night of this week. Weekly races are being planned by the St. Nicholas management.

The feature of the evening will be the match race between A. R. Englington, representing the New York Roller Skating Club and holder of the Eastern championships at a half and two miles, and Joe Forrest, Sergeant Major of the 1st Regiment, United States Marine Corps, now stationed at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and who holds all the championships of the Pacific Coast. This match will be in half-mile heats, the best two out of three, the one-mile amateur event being held between the first and second heat. There are many of the fast roller skaters now in the service and the rinks in other cities have been putting on weekly races for them, as well as specially arranged single and team matches.

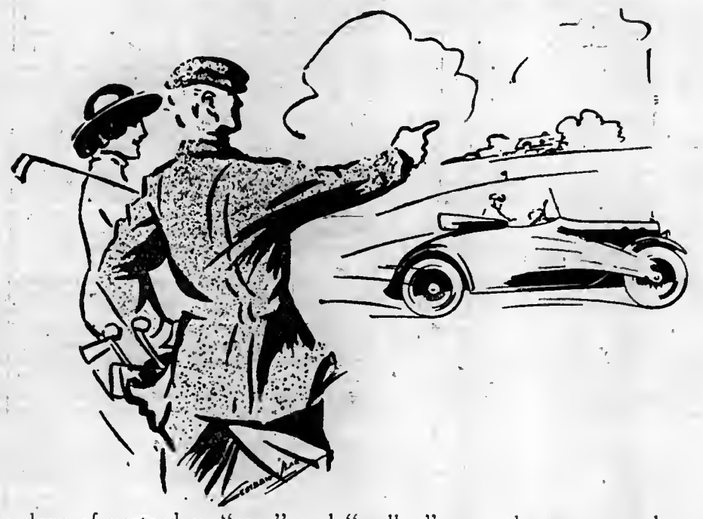
An engine that runs with softness, due to the now noted "Hot-Spot" and "Ram's-Horn" Manifold—Chalmers features.



In the days of yesterday, "roar" and "wallop" were the terms used to define an engine's power.

Today, it is the softness of power, the controllability of it that fascinates.

It is a new kind of power to many, brought to public attention through the famous "Hot-Spot" and "Ram's-Horn" Manifold of the Chalmers.

For here the gas is heated, and "cracked-up" at the throat of the carburetor by the "Hot-Spot" and then rushed quickly via the "Ram's-Horn" Manifold into the combustion chambers.

It is "toasted" so nicely, "pulverized" so fine, that the instant after sparking there is well-nigh no waste of gas.

Little of power comes out of the exhaust. All the power comes out of the rear wheels—and such pleasing, well-harnessed power, that your enthusiasm for driving reaches a new peak.

"Carry On"

THE fighting slogan in France, gathering inspiration and significance as the conflict grows more violent and more desperate, is "Carry On." On land, on sea, in the air, it rings sharp and clear.

Into the front line trenches comes the signal to charge. The company commander swings "over the top." At his heels, pushing and stumbling through the hell of "No Man's Land" come the boys. They gain a yard, five, ten, and the machine guns speak. The commander falls, but over his shoulder, above the din of battle, he shouts, "Carry On, Lieutenant!" So on and on, till every officer falls, and the grizzled old Sergeant sets his teeth and takes what's left of them on to the goal.

"Carry On" must be our slogan here at home. We must "Carry On" to the utmost limit our ability, to the last dollar of our resources, till Victory is won. Let us stand shoulder to shoulder—buy all the Liberty Bonds we can. Let us keep our Bonds and save to buy more.

"Carry On"!

PLACES AVAILABLE FOR BOUT DECREASE

Nevada and New Mexico Will Not Permit Willard-Fulton Encounter.

PLANS NEW BOXING CLUB

New Jersey Sportsmen's Club Arranging to Promote Sport Within Easy Reach of New York.

Another week has passed without announcement from Colonel J. C. Miller of Bliss, Okla., of his selection of a site for the proposed heavyweight championship bout between Jess Willard, the Kansan, and Fred Fulton of Rochester, Minn., challenger for the title. In fact as the days pass it seems the task of securing a battleground becomes more arduous, and the result is that there is less promise now than ever before that the contest will be held over a championship distance on July 4. Colonel Miller, who is partner with Willard in the promotion of the bout, has carefully refrained from making known the place he has in mind wherein to stage the exhibition, and it is not known if he has been successful in his search.

A feeling against the bout as it is at present planned is growing in various parts of the country. The latest to deliver a rebuke to the two heavyweights and those behind the contest is Governor Boyle of Nevada, who, in stating that the contest could not be held within his jurisdiction, admonished the prospective principals in the encounter to direct their fighting energies to the war.

During the last week also Governor Lindsay of New Mexico has stated positively that he would not tolerate the contest in his State. This leaves the field of locations decidedly slim, for on his visit to this city some weeks back Colonel Miller specifically stated that he had both Nevada and New Mexico in mind as likely locations for the championship.

As yet there have been no objections emanating from Oklahoma, and it is possible that Colonel Miller will reconsider his previously announced intention of evading his home State and make an effort to gain permission for the bout from the Governor of Oklahoma.

It is expected that if the contest is held on July 4, as planned, there will be a considerable change in the articles which both boxers have signed for the match. The idea of giving a patriotic tinge to the exhibition is steadily gaining in favor with the public, and it is not at all unlikely that one or both of the principals in the proposed bout will be swayed toward making a vastly different distribution of whatever purse will result from the match.

Another boxing club is expected to spring up in New Jersey within a short time, according to latest reports. Yesterday it was announced that the New Jersey Sportsmen's Club, holding forth at the Hexamer Riding Academy, Weehawken, will soon open its doors to the boxing public. The proposed club is within twenty-five minutes' ride of the centre of Manhattan and is accessible either by ferry or tube. The promoters behind the new project expect, therefore, that a large following of New York boxing enthusiasts will be attracted to the new club, especially since it is planned to promote exhibitions between the leading boxers of various classes.

A syndicate of New Jersey sporting men, whose identity is not disclosed, is reported behind the new venture, and it is understood they are making arrangements to take over two other buildings suitable for the promotion of boxing and other sports. The reports of the proposed new club state that it is capable of accommodating 4,500 people. It has been tentatively arranged to stage a bout between Frankie Burns, the Jersey City veteran bantamweight boxer, and Joe Lynch of this city, one of the leading contenders for the title in this class. No date or other definite plans have been made public.

Another club which is expected to start operations shortly under the new Hurley law in the State across the Hudson is the Murtaugh Boxing Club of Jersey City. Application for a license for this organization was reported last week, but no action on the application has been recorded.

Local Amateur Athletic Union officials are delighted with the treatment the amendment to Section 1710 of the Penal Code has received in the Senate. The amendment was introduced by Senator Robert R. Lawson of Brooklyn and Assemblyman Charles D. Donohue of New York, and, when made a law, which it is anticipated will follow, will legalize amateur boxing exhibitions at local clubs of the A. A. U., where an admission fee is charged. Since the abolition of the Frawley law, which governed boxing in this State, amateur tournaments have been conducted at the more prominent local clubs affiliated with the A. A. U., but at all of them the admission fee has been abolished because of the law.

The enactment of the amendment will give the local A. A. U. clubs a free rein in the conduct of amateur boxing exhibitions between amateurs of not more than four rounds of three minutes' duration each, with gloves not less than five ounces in weight. All these contests, however, must be sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union or the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America. With so many clubs affiliated with the A. A. U. in the metropolitan district, especially the great number of organizations of less prominence than the New York A. C. and Crescent A. C., it is expected that amateur boxing will receive a great boom in the future under the new regulations.

Johnny Dundee, the local Italian lightweight boxer, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia for more than a week, is reported by his manager, Scotty Monteith, safely past the crisis of his illness and on the road to recovery. Dundee was forced to cancel many out-of-town boxing engagements through his illness, and it will be many weeks before he will again be able to don the gloves.

The two bouts which Benny Leonard participated in last week showed that, while he is lacking in that finish to his boxing which was his before he assumed the duties of Boxing Instructor at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., the lightweight champion, with a few active ring engagements, would be able to round himself again into championship form. The world's titleholder, through his work at the army camp, has added to his weight, and in his boxing he is slow and ineffective in comparison to his form after gaining the title. Leonard, however, according to his manager, Billy Gibson, is not giving serious thought to ring engagements just now, but is directing his efforts toward aiding the athletic training of the drafted men at Camp Upton. So there seems to be no immediate need for him to worry about his fighting condition or the challenges of any of his numerous rivals for lightweight championship honors.

Bryan Downey, a Western welterweight, was in this city yesterday seeking a match with the champion, Ted (Kid) Lewis of England. Downey has a creditable reputation as a welterweight, and in a bout at Columbus, Ohio, recently, gave a good account of himself against the champion. Tom Jones, manager of the Westerner, declared yesterday that many of the critics who witnessed this bout gave the decision to Downey, and since then Jones has been endeavoring to arrange a bout to a decision between Downey and Lewis.

George Chip of Newcastle, Penn., former middleweight champion, and Harry Greb, a Pittsburgh boxer, will be opponents in a fifteen-round bout at the Union Boating Club, Bridgeport, Conn., tomorrow night.

Amateur boxers of the metropolitan district are being attracted to the tournament which will be held at the Bensonhurst Yacht Club, Brooklyn, April 18 and 20. Bouts will be held in four classes and it is expected that before closing time for the entries tomorrow some of the leading boxers of the district will have sent in their names as prospective participants. The weights are 110, 118, 128, and 138 pounds, and in each class three prizes will be distributed. A point trophy will be given to the club having the greatest number of contestants weigh in and compete. The 118 and 128 pound classes will be for novices.

Although definite announcement has not yet been made, it was learned yesterday from an offical of the A. A. U. that a furlough has been promised Robert Gleason, former metropolitan 145 and 158 pound ameteur boxing champion, who is now with the Quartermaster's Department at Spartanburg, S. C. This will enable Gleason to make the journey to this city to compete in the Crescent Athletic Club's final amateur boxing tournament of the season. The tourney is scheduled for the New Moon gymnasium on April 25, and will be a one-night affeir. James Sullivan of the Union Settlement A. C., national and metropolitan champion, has been selected as Gleason's opponent. This contest will be a special event. The remainder of the program will be given over to an intercity tournament between the boxers of Boston and New York. It is expected that champions of both districts will be on the teams from each city.

CORNEAU IS WITH Y. M. C. A.

Man Who Developed Carpentier Has Fine Record as Army Trainer.

Raymond Corneau, the French trainer, who developed Georges Carpentier into the best heavyweight in Europe, has entered the services of the American Y. M. C.A. and is now carrying on physical training work among the French soldiers under Dr. George S. Meylen, Professor of Physical Education at Columbia.

At the time the war broke out both Carpentier and Corneau enlisted, the heavyweight fighter in the aviation service and Corneau as a private in the infantry. In Corneau's regiment eighty soldiers failed to come up to the standard physically. The fight trainer suggested systematic work to develop these men. The suggestion was not adopted. Corneau was only a private.

A short time later Corneau had a chance to show what proper physical training could do, when he took in hand the 15-year-old son of a French Colonel. Immediately his proposal to train the French soldiers was accepted. Corneau arranged several boxing matches between French soldiers and then put on boxing matches between French and American soldiers.

The work progressed rapidly and Corneau's co-operation with the physical directors in the American forces brought him in touch with the work our army was doing, and he joined the ranks of the Y. M. C. A. instructors.

SPORTSMEN TO ORGANIZE.

Statewide Body for New Jersey to be Discussed.

With a view to sounding out sentiment as to the proposed formation of a Statewide organization of sportsmen, a committee representing various sections is at work on plans for a dinner to which every angler, gunner, and other outdoorsman in New Jersey is invited. It is proposed to have the dinner in Newark some time this month, the tentative date selected being Thursday, April 25.

The committee consists of Kenneth F. Lockwood, President of the Newark Bait and Fly Casting Club; Thorfin Tait of Metuchen, President of the Middlesex County Sportsmen's Association; Thomas E. Smith of Monroe, Sussex County; the Rev. H. A. Weaver of Phillipsburg, President of Phillipsburg No. 1, Tri-County Anglers' and Hunters' Association of New Jersey; Claude E. Holgate of Newark, Secretary-Treasurer Association of Surf Angling Clubs; Frank H. Stewart, Old Mint Building, Philadelphia, President Ocean City Fishing Club, and W. F. Laskowski, Jr., Ridgewood, President Ridgewood Branch, Bergen County Sportsmen's Fish and Game Protective Association.

Those who desire to attend are requested to communicate with any member of the committee not later than tomorrow. The Newark members may be reached by addressing them at room 609, Essex Building, Newark.

An announcement sent out by the committee is, in part, as follows:

"In its efforts to get together the anglers and gunners and other out-of-door men of the State the committee is actuated solely by a desire to advance the interests of sport and of the sportsmen, whether the latter live on a farm, in a small town, or in a city. It is not a sectional movement, but one that is conceived to cover the entire State.

"The trend of events in recent years has been anything but satisfactory to the man who really has at heart the promotion of good fishing and hunting and, what really is more important, the maintenance of good sportsmanship among the followers of the sport generally. Only through the latter can the former be at its best.

"Not the least unsatisfactory development has been the undeniable widening of the breach that exists between the country sportsman and his city brother. The responsibility for this is about evenly divided, for neither has tried very hard to understand the viewpoint of the other, or to get at the original causes of the ill-feeling and to remove them if it is possible to do so. And so they have gone on, each his own way, getting further apart each year, constantly eyeing each other with hostile suspicion and angry distrust.

"The seriousness of the situation cannot be exaggerated. It is all so unnecessary, too, so disregardful of the principles of true sportsmanship, so wasteful of the strength that comes from united, harmonious action. It is no light matter, to be heedlessly disposed of, for as sure as anything can be sure, if it continues the time will come when New Jersey will slip back from her place among the sport-producing and sport-loving States of the East.

"Year after year more farmers are posting their lands, year after year the clubs are extending their preserve holdings, and it requires no great stretch of the imagination to foresee the time when, if things go on as they have been, only our larger lakes will be open to the angler who does not own a farm or belong to a club, and when free streams will be few and far between and difficult to find. Our Fish and Game Commission, bound to a policy of stocking only open streams, will then be forced to concentrate its energies on the few public lakes and let the remainder of our waters go hang, so that we will be in the position of having bitten off our own noses to spite our faces.

"The fish and game resources of Maine and New York, to cite two Eastern examples, yield millions of dollars each year. With co-operation on the part of all her sportsmen and with constantly increasing facilities for propagation, New Jersey faces huge possibilities in the same line. In their realization the city and the country sportsmen would share equally.

"To bring agreement out of disagreement ought not to be impossible and is worth any effort. A better understanding by the one of the other, a little more tolerance on each side—and the trick is done. Lined up solidly, with the majority of the best thought—not mere numbers—guiding us and there isn't anything we couldn't accomplish for sport and sportsmanship. Split up, pulling against each other, bickering, jealous, suspicious, we'll get nowhere.

"That is why we are striving for this dinner and why we want every sportsman who possibly can do so to attend. Let each one write in at once to any member of the committee saying that he wants to be there. The cost will be small, and if for nothing else than an evening's entertainment and companionship with other good fellows the money will be well expended."

WEST CALLS MISS GALLIGAN.

Will Compete for Swimming Title in San Francisco.

Miss Claire Galligan and Miss Charlotte Boyle of the New York Women's Swimming Association have accepted an invitation from San Francisco to compete in the National A. A. U. fifty-yard championship for women, being supervised by the Idora Swimming Club, on April 21. They will also engage in match races at longer distances with Miss Dorothy Burns and Miss Frances Cowells, the leading swimmers of the Pacific A. A. U. district.

SOLDIERS TO FORE AT N. Y. A. C. GAMES

Contests for Military Men to be Emphasized at Meet on June 8.

Soldiers and sailors of the local camps and training stations will be afforded another opportunity for athletic competition under the supervision of the New York Athletic Club on June 8, when the Mercury-Foot organization will conduct its annual outdoor Spring games at Travers Island. This year's events will mark the ninety-ninth renewal of the Fifty-ninth Street club's athletic meet. It will mark also a wide departure from the meets of previous years, according to the plans of Matthew P. Halpin, Chairman of the New York A. C. Committee on Athletics.

The work of the Winged-Foot organization in supplying athletic competition for the nation's fighters since this country's entrance into the war will be continued in the outdoor games on an extensive scale. The New York A. C., since the United States declared war on the Huns, has undertaken the task of promoting athletics and athletic entertainments for the enlisted and drafted men, and in addition also has tackled the problem of supplying athletic paraphernalia to the many transports sailing for France laden with men going "over there."

The program originally mapped out by the club officials called for the abandonment of the promotion of all open athletic competitions by the club and placed a ban on the competition of any of the club's representatives in championship events. This stand was taken when the New York A. C. officials deemed it unfair to hold title competitions while the leaders among the country's athletic talent were away on sterner duties.

The work has been carried out successfully from the time it was first taken up. It has struck a popular chord among the members, many of whom have sons or other relatives in one or another branch of the country's service; it has given soldiers and sailors who are so inclined a chance for needed athletic recreation and competition, with the chance to gain useful prizes, and it has been a source of pleasure to the club officials and members to know that they are helping with their bit.

Last year, early in June, at the ninety-eighth annual games of the club, a program of eighteen events was arranged, thirteen of them on track and five on the field, and included in this number were three events for military athletes. They were the one-mile run, the half-mile walk, and the four-fifths of a mile relay race. About 6,000 persons witnessed the games, a great number of them unable to gain seats, thronging the lawns. The principal interest was shown in the three military events and the large fields of soldiers and sailors who responded to the call for entries provided interesting spectacles.

No definite program for this year's games has been adopted as yet, according to Chairman Halpin, but it is the general opinion that enlisted men will have events set aside for them equal in number, if not greater, than those arranged for open competition. There has been no decision reached on the number of events which will make up the program, but it is practically certain that the scheduled competitions will have a distinct military and naval flavor.

No better illustration of the popularity which has greeted the efforts of the New York A. C. toward providing sport for the enlisted men could be had than that which was furnished at the club's annual indoor meet recently. From the standpoint of being a magnet for crowds, the games were decidedly unsuccessful in comparison to the meets of former years. But in point of competitive interest among the soldiers and bluejackets the games were a huge success. This, Halpin said in discussing the club's activities yesterday, was the primary reason for the games, and they must, therefore, be considered as highly successful.

The meet on June 8 will be conducted along similar lines to those which governed the competition held by the New York Athletic Club throughout the indoor season. The local camps and training stations will be particularly catered to, but there are expectations that some of the country's leading athletes in training at camps and stations in various other parts of the country will also be seen in the competition. For the enlisted men, who will have practically the entire program to themselves, there will be no entry fee required. The events will be arranged as most adaptable to military training and will include, among others, the hand grenade throwing contest, equipment race, and walking, running, and relay events for the enlisted men in full marching costume.

TITLE BOUTS FOR HOBOKEN.

New Jersey Amateurs to Box for Charity on April 23-25.

The annual amateur boxing championships of New Jersey will be decided at Our Lady of Grace Hall, Hoboken, N. J., April 23 and 25. The tournament will be conducted under the auspices of the Metropolitan Association and the Knights of Columbus, Hoboken Branch. The entire proceeds are to be expended in athletic work at Camp Merritt, Tenafly, N. J., and Hoboken. Soldiers and sailors in uniform will be admitted to the bouts each night free.

The classes at which titles will be decided are 115, 125, 135, 145, 158 pounds, and heavyweight. In addition, there will be boxing in an open class for all registered A. A. U. boxers at 110 pounds.

MAT BOUTS ARRANGED.

Two Wrestling Matches Scheduled for Prospect Hall Saturday.

Two promising wrestling matches have been arranged at Prospect Hall, Brooklyn, for next Saturday night. In one of them Louis Nelson, the welterweight grappler who recently defeated Gus Petorson, will oppose Bobby Sommerville of England. Sommerville is the holder of the Lord Lonsdale belt, emblematic of the championship of Great Britain. Heavyweights will be the principals in the other match, in which Bernhof Hansen of Brooklyn and Cyclone Ress of Charleston, S. C., will go to the mat. Both matches will be governed by catch-as-catch-can rules, and the winners will be determined best two out of three falls.

FORDHAM TO PLAY TUFTS.

Maroon Nine to Make Another Attempt to Start Home Season.

With yesterday's game with Seton Hall called off because the Fordham diemond was a veritable quagmire, the Bronx collegiane are looking forward to making a fresh start next Wednesday to open their home season. It will be the third attempt to get the home season under way. Tufts, lecerded to oppose the Maroons. If this game is called off the Fordham adherents will have to wait a full week before seeing their team in action, as the Crescent A. C. will be played next Saturday at Bay Ridge. In 1916 the four first games had to be called off on account of the weather, and this season threatens the record.

HARVARD TO ENTER MEET.

Crimson Athletes to Compete in Intercollegiate Games.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 13.—Harvard will send about ten members of its 'Varsity track team to the intercollegiate meet in Philadelphia next month. The decision to keep out of the Pennsylvania relay games was in accordance with Harvard's well defined stand not to take part in intercollegiate athletics with any other dual rivals than Yale and Princeton. The Crimson authorities view the intercollegiate meet with its numerous collegiate entries, however, as a proper carnival in which to allow their runners to perform.

READY FOR TENNIS SEASON.

High Schools Will Begin Play in P. S. A. L. Tourney April 27.

The annual Public Schools Athletic League high school tennis championship will begin on April 27, when the opening matches will be played in two of the three divisions into which the tournament has this year been divided. Schools in the Manhattan-Bronx-Richmond and the Brooklyn division will begin play on this date, and on May 4 the tournament in Queens will start.

Sixteen schools have entered, and because of this large entry the P. S. A. L. officials have found it necessary to arrange the playing schedule in divisions. All matches will be decided on courts constructed on the athletic fields throughout the city. After the opening matches the tournament will progress with weekly competition to its close, June 1. Subsequently interborough matches will be played on June 5 and 8. The teams will consis of five members, three playing in singles and two in doubles.

NEW CUE BODY PROGRESSES

Nearly 200 New York Members Added to Association.

The new American Amateur Billiard Association is proving a greater success than was expected by its founders. Already nearly 200 billiardists have joined in the East, while the West is just beginning to organize. Meetings will be held in Chicago shortly. Among the local members will be found such prominent players as Crshel, Coleman, Conway, George P. B. Clarke, all of whom were former Class B champions; Wilson P. Foss and Arthur Townsend, former Class A champions, as well as Dr. Mial of the same class.

The association is now conducting its first annual events for the metropolitan championship at 18.2 balkline and three cushions. This latter event is the first of its kind ever attempted by any amateur body.

Arrangements are now being made by which the association will have a permanent clubroom at one of the leading hotels, and regular open monthly meetings will be held. Encouraged by the success of the present tournaments, members are now discussing the advisability of arranging for the big events which are to take place next Winter. Championship events are to be held in at least four classes for balkline and two classes for three cushions and straight rail, also pocket billiards.

Following is the standing of the players in the present tournament:

Trotting Meet Is Arranged.

Committees representing the Junior League of Amateur Driving Clubs, the Parkway Driving Club of Brooklyn, and the Nassau Driving Club of Mineola have arranged to hold the annual trotting meeting of the league on July 15, 16, and 17, together with sixteen harness racing matinees of the Nassau Club at the Parkway track in Brooklyn. Both the meeting and the matinees were to have been held at the track on the Mineola Fair Grounds, but the horsemen were dispossessed when the Government took over the property a fortnight ago for war purposes.

CONTROL OF POCKET BILLIARDS PLANNED

National Advisory Board to Hold All Tournaments Throughout the Country.

TITLE EVENT TWICE YEARLY

Champion to be Called Upon to Defend Laurels in Competition with Best Players.

One of the most sweeping efforts to control professional pocket billiards that has ever been attempted has come forth from the National Billiard Advisory Board, with the sanction of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company. It is to be put into effect during the season of 1918-19, and will have sway not alone over national events, but over sectional titles, such as interstate, State, and district. This means the practical abolishment of the old scheme of professional pocket billiard play, whereby Frank Taberski, the present champion, gained his laurels. Under the new plan there will be no titles holding over for an entire year.

It is proposed now to have tournaments for all the titles twice a year, and to have the champion free from challenge during the six months that intervenes between tournaments. To retain his title for an additional six months the player has to compete in the next tournament, as the championship automatically expires at the end of the six months time allotment. The national, interstate, and State champions are to be under salary during the period that they are title holders. The details of the plan as given out by the Billiard Advisory Board follow:

"The National Billiard Advisory Board has planned a mobilization of the pocket billiard forces of the United States. Not only will there be titles at stake, but three of them will carry salaries.

The holder of the national title will receive a monthly salary of $250. He will hold the title six months and not be subject to challenge. Then the title expires automatically.

"The holder of an interstate title will receive a monthly salary of $150, and of a State championship, $100.

"The winner of a State district championship will receive no remuneration other than the prize of the tournament he wins, but will receive a certificate showing that he is eligible to compete in the State tournament.

"Each State competing will be divided into districts of not less than ten or more than twelve subdivisions, the winner to play for the State title.

"For the interstate championships the States have been placed in groups of four and five, the winners of the State events being eligible. These will serve as a qualifying round for the national championship.

The entry fee for the State district tournaments will be $10, for the State $30, the interstate $75, and the national, $100.

District and State events will be played in public billiard rooms selected by the district manager and interstate and national events in public concert halls where practicable.

Tournaments will be held twice yearly in each of the classes. The first series in the district events will be held Sept. 15 to 30, and the second March 1 to 15. The first State events will be held Oct. 15 to 30 and the second April 1 to 15. The interstate will run from Nov. 15 to 30 and May 1 to 15, while the national titles will be settled Dec. 15 to 30 and June 1 to 15.

"The national champion will have to qualify by playing through the new series in the district, State, and interstate classes. In order to eliminate tedious games, safety plays will be penalized to the limit and tournament games will consist of ninety balls pocketed.

"The officers of the National Billiard Advisory Board are Thomas Foley, Chicago, Chairman; Maurice Daly, New York; C. C. Peterson, St. Louis; L. A. Bensinger, Chicago; C. P. Miller, New York; W. P. Mussey, Chicago; H. F. Davenport, Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, Chicago, Secretary.

W. V. Thompson of Chicago and New York will be the general manager and E. A. Lucire, Los Angeles, assistant manager, will handle the Pacific Coast division.

The States have been grouped as follows:

A—Oregon, Washington, California, Arizona.

B—Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada.

C—Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma.

D—North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas.

E—Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri.

F—Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio.

G—Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama.

H—Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina.

I—Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, and District of Columbia.

J—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island.

K—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont Massachusetts.

FEW TENNIS EVENTS MISSING THIS YEAR

Schedule Shows All Big Fixtures Excepting Longwood and Newport Singles.

TITLE PLAY TO CRESCENTS

Brooklyn Club Gets Metropolitan Championships — Local Tournament Season Opens May 11.

The schedule of about 150 tennis fixtures for the coming season, which was issued yesterday by the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, while showing a cut of something like one-third from the schedule that was arranged for 1917, indicates a full season of tennis in the metropolitan section and throughout the country as well. A close study of the schedule reveals the fact that in many cases the missing tournaments are those rated as of minor importance. This is not entirely true, for there are two events among the absentees which have heretofore held a recognized place among the big fixtures of the year. These are the Longwood singles and the annual tournament at the Casino at Newport.

The Longwood singles has been one of the best known of the open tournaments during many years. Longwood last year adopted the national doubles championship when that was separated from the national singles and established as a big tournament. This year it is understood Longwood decided that it would be advantageous to abandon the singles. It is confidently believed that under more favorable conditions than the present the singles event will be revived.

The other big tournament which is lacking from the list, the Newport Invitation event, was passed last year and it is therefore not quite so surprising that it should again be set aside. Ever since the national singles championship was taken from Newport that city has been on the wane as a centre of tournament activity. The only flap that came from Newport as to tennis this Winter was in relation to the national singles, a report being sent out prior to the annual meeting of the U. S. N. L. T. A. that Newport stood ready to take the tournament provided it was assured to the Casino for a term of years.

Switch in Local Dates.

There is one switch of dates of local interest. The Metropolitan championships, held for several years on the dirt courts at Bronxville, have been awarded to the Crescent Athletic Club and have been set well down the list, so that the tournament is included among the really big fixtures. It is probable that the tournament at the Crescent A. C. will be played on the turf courts, which will give it added prestige. It is set this year for July 29, preceding by a week the annual invitation tournament at the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club.

The season in the metropolitan district will open on May 11 with the annual Harlem Lawn Tennis Club tournament. A week before this there was to have been a men's tournament at the Essex County Country Club, but this was changed to combine it with a women's tournament at the same club on May 20. The annual invitation tournament at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club will begin on May 27, and from then on to the close of the season there will be tournaments almost every week. The last local date, the open mixed doubles tournament at the Essex County Country Club, is Oct. 12, but the season for big fixtures ends with the playing of the national championships on the courts of the West Side Tennis Club, beginning Aug. 26.

The big tournaments leading up to the nationals are somewhat changed from former years. Beginning with the Crescent A. C. tournament on July 29 there follow the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club tournament, beginning Aug. 5; the national doubles at Boston, on Aug. 12, and the Southampton tournament on Aug. 19.

In speaking of the schedule, Julian S. Myrick, Vice President of the Tennis Association, said:

Schedule Is Favorable.

"The schedule compares favorably with that of last season. In 1917 about 225 dates were on the list, so there is a remarkably small reduction, in view of prevailing conditions. Apparently this indicates that the members of the National Association welcome the opportunity to compete for titles, and are cordially in favor of the program adopted by the annual meeting. All tournaments will be played for the benefit of the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities. The funds will be handled through the association's treasurer, George W. Wightman of Boston."

C.C.N.Y. NET DATES REVISED.

Columbia Tennis Team to be Met in First Match.

Cancellations and postponements have caused a revision of the tennis schedule of the College of the City of New York. Several rival colleges desired other dates. The match with Columbia, originally slated for Thursday, will not be affected. This contest will be held at the Morningside courts on South Field.

Elimination trials for regular berths on the team were supposed to start yesterday, but the bad weather prevented. The week before the game with Columbia will be occupied by weeding out the large squad and a selection of a team.

The City College team will play all home matches on the Marion courts, where daily practice has been held.

The revised schedule follows:

April 18—Columbia at Columbia.
April 20—Stevens at Hoboken.
April 26—Lehigh at City College.
April 27—New York University at New York University.
May 4—Fordham at City College.
May 11—(Morning,) Amherst at City College; (afternoon,) Stevens Tech at City College.
May 16—Manhattan at City College.
May 25—Fordham at Fordham.

BUSY WEEK AT COLUMBIA.

Swarthmore, Union, and Cornell to be Met on Diamond.

After having been out of uniform for several days because the storm has made practice on South Field impossible, the Columbia nine this week faces the hardest week on its schedule. Three games will be played, all of them on the home diamond.

Swarthmore comes to Columbia Wednesday afternoon, followed by Union on Friday. It will be the opening game of the season for the Schenectady boys. Columbia's hardest contest, however, will be played against Cornell Saturday. It is to be the first game of a series of three arranged between the two teams, and Coach Coakley's players consider this trio the most important events on their program. Every attempt is being made on the Columbia campus to make the game Saturday afternoon one of the gala affairs of the season.

Columbia had to call off the Fordham game scheduled last Wednesday with Fordham at Fordham Field, and before the weather made play impossible. Colgate had canceled the engagement she had for yesterday afternoon on Morningside, so that Columbia has had one game in the last week, and that was a practice game last Monday.

COLUMBIA MARKSMEN BUSY.

Complete Eighth Match in Contest for Baker Trophy.

Columbia riflemen have passed the eighth match in the contest for the intercollegiate championship and the Baker Trophy, which the War Department is awarding to the college which makes the best scores in ten matches.

In their eighth match, shot yesterday, the Columbia marksmen scored 983 out of a possible 1,000, which was two points below the previous record made by the team in shooting the sixth match. Four men scored 197 out of a possible 200 hits. They were W. G. Fogg, C. Wandres, J. R. Twiss, and R. L. Smith. A. F. Richardson, Jr., came through with a score of 195.

Because each college shooting in the tournament is required by the rules to send the scores of each match directly to the War Department, Columbia has heard nothing concerning the relative standing of the contestants, but it is believed that the team is keeping close to the top, for comparison with previous records shows that the Blue and White is shooting close to its usual form.

NO FRATERNITY BASEBALL.

Annual Feature of Columbia's Sports May Be Abandoned.

The annual interfraternity baseball series, which has always been a feature of Spring sports at Columbia, may be omitted from the program of activities this year. Spectator, the college daily publication, has urged the Greek letter houses to organize teams as usual, but little seems to have been accomplished toward reviving the league.

It seems to be generally regarded that it would be impracticable for the fraternities to attempt to put out nines this Spring, because with the depletion of the senior class and the noticeable falling off from 1919, some of the Greek letter houses have been so hard hit that they probably could not fill a nine. Several have been practicing informally, but it seems doubtful now whether the league will be revived.

Brooklyn Boy Tiger Captain.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 13.—Henry D. Johnson of the sophomore class has been chosen captain of the Princeton swimming team for next season. Johnson participated in the 50 and 100 yard swims in most of the intercollegiate meets of Princeton, and won the 50-yard event in the intercollegiates, held here two weeks ago. He prepared for Princeton at St. Paul's School, Long Island. His home is in Brooklyn.

GEORGIA TECH GOLF TEAM TO PLAY HERE

With Adair and Prescott as Leaders, Southerners Are to Invade the North.

MEET PENN AND TIGERS

Following Match with Columbia Atlanta Players Are to Take On Leading Experts.

Encouraged by the action of A. L. Walker, Jr., manager of the Columbia University golf team, in scheduling a series of team matches with other universities, the Georgia Institute of Technology at Atlanta is planning a schedule even more extensive. Under the management of Fred Howden a team of four players representing Georgia Tech will leave Atlanta on April 20 for a tour of Northern institutions.

Already matches have been arranged with the Columbia team to be played at the Englewood Golf Club on April 23. Two days later Princeton is to be met at Princeton, and two days after that the University of Pennsylvania players are to be played in a match over some Philadelphia course. Georgia Tech is still corresponding with Yale and Harvard in hopes of arranging a match with one of these institutions for April 24. Should this last match be secured the Atlanta players will have for themselves a series of high-class matches.

The Atlanta team is one of decided strength, and more than likely to triumph over anything that can be pitted against it on the tour. Leading off the team are Perry Adair and Tom Prescott, two Atlanta boys who made their mark in the world of golf during the last few years. Adair toured the country with Bobby Jones and was considered every bit as good as Jones.

Adair and Prescott will play the top matches for Georgia Tech and will be paired together in the four-ball, best-ball matches. The arrangements now are for two four-ball matches and four individual matches, each of eighteen holes, to be played morning and afternoon of each day. Adair and Prescott are able to play a best ball of par on almost any course in the country. The other two members of the team are Fred Howden, the manager, and J. Watkins. The ability of these two is not known here, but if the brand of Atlanta golf is considered, they they must be dangerous, as Atlanta has turned out the best golfers of the country in the last few years.

The Columbia team is practicing almost daily at the Far Rockaway links, under the watchful eye of Irving Stringer, professional there. Walker, who won the Eastern Interscholastic championship last year as well as the Staten Island championship, in which he defeated A. F. Kammer of Fox Hills, one of the best players in the local district, is rounding to great form. His driving, always a feature of the game, seems to have greater distance and accuracy than ever before. Walker can look forward to a big year in golf. Should the Intercollegiate Golf Association decide to hold its annual individual and team championships this year, Walker will go into the tournament a big favorite.

Although only a youngster he gives promise of developing into one of the best players of New York. He is maturing fast in the knowledge and fine points of golf, and is learning the art of accuracy on his approach shots. Not long ago Jack Pirie, formerly professional at Richmond County, Walker's home club, declared that Walker was to be another Jerry Travers. "He has the style, the ability, and the knowledge of golf," explained Pirie.

Walker has never taken part in any big tournaments and may not have a chance to show his ability against the experts of the game for some time because of the war, but New York can look to him to care for its golf laurels in a few years. Walker has picked up golf slowly. He has learned his lessons well and with every round of the links he becomes more finished. Walker already has shattered the course record at several clubs and he is getting better all the time.

A. H. Pogson, Secretary of the Metropolitan Golf Association, has announced that the Executive Committee of the local body has approved the dates for the Westchester County golf championship to be held at Siwanoy, and an invitation tourney of three days to be held at Sleepy Hollow. The Westchester event will be held on June 20, 21, and 22, and the Sleepy Hollow tourney on June 13, 14, and 15.

Some time ago officials of the Westchester Association announced that a novelty in tournaments would be held in place of the usual three-day affair, but now it seems that a regular championship tournament would be the issue. Several other clubs are expected to request dates for tournaments of two or three days, and an announcement of the list can be expected soon.

One of the novelties of the year undoubtedly will be the series of matches to be played by the experts of golf throughout the country in the interest of the Red Cross. Plans for these events have been perfected in the last few days by officials in Washington working in conjunction with the golf officials, and now it is assured that there will be almost a continual exhibition of the ancient sport by all of those capable of showing its intricacies.

The first of the exhibitions will find Jim Barnes and Walter Hagen, the two leading professionals of the country, pitted against Jock Hutchinson, Chicago's most able professional, and Chick Evans, the national amateur and open champion. They are to start the exhibitions in the West. Following this first fourball match there will be matches in which all of the leading lights will take part.

There is to be a record kept in all the matches and the victories scored on a point system, so that by the end of the season it will be possible to tell what players have led. The women of the country are to have a big part in the exhibitions, and among those who are expected to take part are Miss Alexa Stirling, the national champion; Miss Elaine V. Rosenthal, former Western champion, and Mrs. William A. Gavin, the metropolitan champion.

As a substitute for the annual fixtures of golf these affairs may gain great prominence, since it is the intention of interesting the best local players everywhere in the country and pit these players against those of national importance who may visit the different sections of the country. New York can expect to have many big exhibitions this season.

The Directors of the Western Golf Association have adopted a resolution permitting the 250 golf clubs in the association to offer Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps as prizes during the war without affecting the amateur status of the contestants. Heretofore it was always considered that playing for money prizes made the player a professional, but the action of the Western officials seems farsighted in this case.

The Western body estimates that $100,000 will be spent by golf clubs in that association for Government war securities. Other golf bodies may adopt this rule from the West without fear of being laughed at.

The Haworth Country Club, Haworth, N. J., opened its golf course to members and guests yesterday, and there was a good-sized turnout to enjoy the game. Peter O'Hara, recently of the Field Club, Pittsburgh, will be the professional at Haworth this season. He is rated an able player, having finished sixth in the Western open event last year. Henry F. Hosley, one of the members of the club, who lives in Haworth, has volunteered to give considerable of his time this season to superintending the running of the club. C. C. Nohlen, President for his second year, states that twenty-five applications for membership have been received.

Rain Keeps Navy Nine Idle.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 13.—The baseball game between Navy and University of Pennsylvania, scheduled for today, was canceled owing to wet grounds. Four days of almost continuous rain had put the diamond in bad shape.

YALE MEET ON MAY 18.

List of Events for Interscholastic Contests Is Announced.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 13.—The sixteenth annual Yale interscholastic meet will be held in New Haven on May 18 this year. Due to the lack of 'Varsity meets this year resulting from the wartime conditions, this meet will have one of the most important places in the schedule of track events to be undertaken at Yale.

Although the war is causing many of the schools to cut down on their team expenses and thus do away with many of the trips that are usually taken, yet it is expected that as many if not more schools than usual will take part in this meet. Taft School and Hill School have definitely decided to come, as have also the Berkeley-Irving School, Williston Seminary, and Clason Point Military Academy. Loomis Academy and the Hotchkiss School are among those who are concluding definite arrangements to participate in this meet.

Unfortunately, the meet comes on the same day as the Pennsylvania interscholastic meet, but not much conflict is expected, as the two meets draw entries from almost different quarters of the country.

Gold, silver, and bronze medals will be given for first, second and third places, respectively, in this meet, and fourth place will count toward the banner which will be given to the school winning the highest number of points in the meet. The silver cup given to the school for winning the highest total of points in every meet has been won three times by Exeter, and if this school wins again this year it will have the cup permanently.

There are several events on the program open to high schools only, although these same high schools may compete in any of the other events also.

The list of events and the order in which they come is as follows:

1—120-yard hurdles, trial heats.
2—100-yard dash, trial heats.
3—1-mile run.
5—440-yard run.
6—120-yard hurdles, final heat.
7—100-yard dash, final heat.
8—800-yard run.
9—100-yard dash, final heat.

SIX ATHLETES WOUNDED.

Members of St. Vincent Ferrer A. C. on Casualty Lists.

The athletes of the St. Vincent Ferrer A. C. of Yorkville are on the firing line. Concrete evidence of this fact is presented in the recent casualty list of the War Department which cite six members of the club as having been wounded slightly in action in France. They are Steve Derrick, a former amateur boxer; Jim Coffey, full back on the club eleven; Joe Conlon of the basket ball team; Eddie Mendez of the track squad, and Frank Folson and Tomlinson. Steve Derrick was the first St. Vincent boy to be on a casualty list, as his name appeared nearly a month ago.

In terms of athletic deeds the St. Vincent Ferrer A. C. is a small organization. It has blazed no dim trail in local athletic circles, but it has taken a big place in patriotism. Nearly 90 per cent. of its members have enlisted, and its service flag can now lay claim to 108 stars. Twenty-five per cent. of the members who enlisted were under 21 years. Father Cull, the spiritual director, left last week for an army camp in California to take up his duties as chaplain with the rank of First Lieutenant.

MATMEN TRAIN FOR BOUT.

Lewis and Stecher Prepare for Match on April 26.

When Ed (Strangler) Lewis of Lexington, Ky., and Joe Stecher of Nebraska face each other on the mat at Madison Square Garden April 26 they are expected to furnish an interesting exhibition from the point of view of tactics. The main point at issue will be the relative effectiveness of the favorite hold of the grapplers, whether the Kentuckian's headlock will prove superior to the Nebraskan's painful scissors hold.

Both wrestlers are among the leaders in the efforts of promoters to establish a successor to the late Frank Gotch, and it is reported they have both already begun active training for the coming match. Lewis will direct his efforts toward perfecting his headlock, with which hold he has scored numerous victories. Stecher, it is reported, will devote much of his training period to increasing the effectiveness of his scissors hold.

This will be the third meeting between these two wrestlers. Their previous two engagements did not result to the advantage of either grappler.

MONTCLAIR RIFLEMEN WIN.

Defeat Evander Childs Marksmen in Correspondence Match.

Scores of a correspondence rifle shooting match between Montclair Academy of New Jersey and Evander Childs High School, announced yesterday afternoon, gave the New Jersey school's representatives a victory by a score of 974 to 878. This triumph gives the Montclair Academy quintet its fifth consecutive victory of the season. A noteworthy incident of the match was the fact that the lowest score on the victorious team, 192, made by Sherman, was higher than the topmost score for an Evander Childs gunner, Kellogg, who had 182.

The highest score was made by Cunningham of Montclair Academy, who accounted for 198 points. This is within two tallies of a perfect score. The victorious team had an average of 194.8 points, and that of Evander Childs H. S. was 175.6.

The scores:

MONTCLAIR.		EVANDER CHILDS.
Cunningham	198	Kellogg	182
Craig	195	H. Dohni	179
Moore	195	Kuhlman	176

CORNELL FOOTBALL SCHEDULE IN DOUBT

University Authorities May Not Open Institution in Fall Until Oct. 21.

THREE GAMES MAY BE LOST

Late Start at Practice Endangers Chance of Ithacans in Annual Contests on Gridiron.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 13.—If a proposed change in the Cornell University calendar now under consideration by the faculty is adopted radical changes in the plans for Cornell football next Fall will have to be made.

The faculty has under consideration a proposal to postpone the opening of the university until Oct. 21, about a month later than usual, the idea being to give a longer vacation to students, thereby permitting them to work in the shipyards or on the farms. If the change is made it is proposed to eliminate all vacations next year and run the university right through from Oct. 21 to commencement. The plan is meeting with considerable opposition, but it may be approved.

If this change is adopted football practice instead of starting about Sept. 18 will not begin until Oct. 7 or thereabouts. The games scheduled for Oct. 5, 12, and 19 would have to be canceled, and in all probability the game scheduled for Oct. 26, because it will be difficult to get a conditioned team on the field so early. The result would be that Cornell would face its big November games with Michigan and Penn with much shorter preparation than usual.

Because of low finances Cornell may be unable to send any entrants to the Pennsylvania relay carnival, it became known today. The Ithacans had given the Relays a prominent part in their schedule and had hoped to send a big delegation of athletes to Franklin Field, but a careful review of the available funds shows that Cornell lacks the money to finance the trip. Most of the available funds will be needed to put on the dual meet with M. I. T. on May 4.

If the Ithacans fail to raise the money to go to the relays it is thought that the prospects of entering the intercollegiates are also slim. No information as to Cornell's plans about this meet has yet been forthcoming.

The annual review and inspection of the Cornell R. O. T. C., held yesterday and today, completes the prescribed work in military training for the year and releases for more active practice a large number of sophomore athletes, as well as a number of upperclassmen. More material for the various teams will now be available, and there will be an impetus for sports.

The track team will benefit materially, and the task of selecting a well-balanced team for the first dual meet of the season with M. I. T. will begin at once. Jack Moakley will count on some six or eight men to do most of the scoring for Cornell. These include Shackleton in the century, Shackleton and Mayer in the 220, Mayer in the 440, Fortier and Mayer in the 880, Dresser and Peck in the mile, Dresser, Spear, Maynard, and Seelbach in the two-mile, Cleminshaw and Smith in the hurdles, and possibly Myers in the high jump.

Two changes have been made in the baseball line-up. Corwin goes to second in place of Kendall, who has been compelled to quit for lack of time, and Whitmore, his arm healed, becomes catcher. The team plays Rutgers next Friday and Columbia in New York City next Saturday.

SOLDIERS IN TITLE RUN.

Cross-Country Race Planned for Men in France.

That athletes who are engaged in war work have not discarded sports was proved yesterday by Emil Von Elling of the Mohawk A. C., who made public part of a letter he had received from John Plitcha, former junior champion walker. Plitcha is now in France, discharging the duties of athletic director to a division of 20,000 soldiers.

In his letter Plitcha writes that there will be an inter-allied championship cross-country race held at Tours, France, May 18. In this event the foremost soldier athletes will strive for the championship. They are, according to Plitcha's writing, in training for the race, and included among those preparing themselves are many of this country's leading distance runners.

The championship race will be the climax to a series of elimination tests which have been held to determine the most capable runners of the various branches of the service. The finalists will compete in the championship run.

Plitcha acquainted Von Elling with another form of sport which has found favor with the American forces in France. It is soccer, and in a recent game a team composed of American soldiers trounced the T' d'Oro team by a score of 4 to 0. This game was played in Paris.

EWING NAMED CAPTAIN.

Will Lead Rensselaer Basket Ball Team Next Season.

TROY, N. Y., April 13.—The 'Varsity basket ball team of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at the close of its 1917-18 season elected Clifford Conklin Ewing of Westfield, N. J., a member of the class of 1919, as Captain of next season's team. Captain Ewing has already played three seasons on the 'Varsity basket ball five, being the team's chief point-getter and having made a remarkable record for accurate long-distance throwing. As a member of the 'Varsity track team, he is the best of the institute's low hurdle jumpers, winning three firsts in intercollegiate track meets last season, and was also placed in the shot-put and the sprints.

CRICKET GAMES ARRANGED.

Twenty-five Matches Scheduled for Local Association.

Although hard hit by the war, which has taken away many cricketers from New York and Philadelphia, twenty-five championship matches for the season have been arranged by the New York and New Jersey Cricket Association, in which six teams will compete. These teams are the Staten Island Cricket and Tennis Club, Manor Field Cricket Club, Bensonhurst Field Club, Bensonhurst Rovers, Columbia Oval Cricket Club, and Columbia Oval Rovers. In addition, there will be five intercity matches with Philadelphia to take the place of the Halifax Cup competition, abandoned for the duration of the war.

CORBETT LEADS AT TRAPS.

Breaks 96 Out of 100 in Weekly Shoot of N. Y. A. C.

Poor lights, a high wind, and a light rain made the shooting conditions exceedingly poor at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. As a result, the Winged Foot gunners returned low scores, considering the high marks that recently have been made there. George J. Corbett, Chairman of the Shooting Committee, won the high scratch prize with the excellent total of 96 out of a possible 100 targets.

Corbett also was one of the few gunners to make a straight string of 25 targets. Three straight strings were returned during the afternoon, and all three perfect scores were made in the shoot for the Travers Island Cup. The other gunners were G. H. Martin and T. H. Lawrence. The prize was taken by the last named.

Full scores of 25 targets won the legs in the other regular shoots. In the Haslin Cup legs were won by W. Bauer, J. P. Donovan, G. J. Corbett, N. Webb, A. C. Hubbell, C. A. Brown, T. H. Lawrence, R. R. Debacher, F. E. Williamson, W. C. Bowers, and E. M. Thomson. In the shoot for the Club Cup legs were scored by C. L. McLeod, J. I. Brandenberg, W. Bauer, R. M. Owen, Z. Rogers, G. J. Corbett, W. B. Ogen, A. C. Hubbell, C. A. Brown, R. R. Debacher, H. D. Knight, D. L. Culver, H. E. Vogel, and R. S. Smith.

The Accumulation Cup legs were taken by W. S. Silkworth, E. M. Leask, and D. S. Culver. The high handicap gunner was F. E. Williamson.

WILLIAMS TO PLAY TENNIS.

Net Sport Revived at New England College.

WILLIAMSTOWN, April 13.—Tennis may be revived as a 'Varsity sport at Williams this year. The Athletic Council favors such a course and, if the annual intercollegiate event is held, the Purple will probably be a contender. Tennis was one of the few sports dropped temporarily here as a wartime measure.

The Williams baseball nine opens its season one week from today with Hamilton. Coach Thomas has been favored by unusually good weather, several weeks of outdoor work having been put in. Chief attention continues to be turned toward developing a twirler. Perry, Ewing, and Card are the leading choices.

"Benny" Boynton, the football star, is holding down third base on the 'Varsity nine and hitting the ball hard in practice. Manning at first, Captain Dunn at second and Frazier at short complete the infield.

HARVARD ATHLETES PREPARE FOR GAMES

Baseball, Track, and Crew Candidates Give Up Vacation for Heavy Training.

'VARSITY EIGHT UNCERTAIN

Oarsmen Shifted About by Coach Haines in Hope of Finding Harmony of Stroke.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 13.—Harvard's three major sport teams are to spend part of their Spring recess at practice, the crew remaining in Cambridge through the week and the baseball and track teams reporting after a few days of rest.

Both the 'Varsity crew and baseball team open their season in two weeks. The oarsmen are to row Princeton on Lake Carnegie, while the baseball nine's task is to beat Princeton on the same date at Soldiers Field. The track team has no immediate prospects of a meet, but the freshman team will take on Andover later in the month.

In preparation for the Princeton races Coach Bill Haines shuffled both his 'Varsity and freshman crews around. Neither of the crews seems to get the evenness, combined with skill and strength, that the coach believes they should, and he hopes that his latest shift will bring about the harmony. The rowing has been too choppy.

After rowing in the same order for two weeks Haines placed Charley Batchelder back in the second crew, and John Linder was promoted and placed at No. 3 on the 'Varsity. Ames Stevens, one of the most powerful of the crew, who has been rowing No. 3, took to the other side of the boat at No. 4, while John Colemon, whose post he took, was relayed to No. 2. Haines will work the eight in this order next week, and looks for better results.

The chief changes in the freshman crew were the dropping of Tom Denton, who was replaced by John Sise, and the general shift, one move of which placed Acting Captain John Borland at No. 4, his former position at stroke being taken by Marlin Olmsted.

Harvard's 'Varsity and freshman crews will reach Princeton for their races April 25, and will be quartered at undergraduate dormitories while there. Charley Hart, Harvard's rigger, will go to Lake Carnegie next week to rig the 1915 Princeton shell from starboard to port, so that his crews can use the craft for their races.

Harvard's baseball prospects received a jolt when Johnnie Wolverton, the red-headed second baseman, broke his jawbone. There does not seem to be much chance of getting him into the Princeton game, and Joe Fischer is taking his place. Lucky Jones at first and Dick Hallowell at third are fixtures. Captain Gross is the pivot of the infield, and the transformation from the outfield to short stop has not affected him.

In the outfield Ward and Evans have left and centre fields clinched, but the former has a little difficulty to smooth over with the college office before he can play. McCouch and Bright are to fight it out for right field.

Phil Newton is the most puzzling of the pitchers, but he too is scholastically wabbly. Johnson is a pitcher worthy of mention, but is lax in his attendance at practice. Tom Gammack is leading for the position of catcher by a small margin. His throwing, a weak point in his freshman year, has improved greatly. Phil Zach and Earl Swigert are the remaining backstops, but both have lots to learn about the game.

In track, Coach Donovan will be at the field on Tuesday and Thursday of next week. The idea of racing in the service marathon has been abandoned entirely.

After Spring recess, practice will be limited to three afternoons a week, Tuesdays and Fridays being devoted to military training and athletics.

ROBINS ALSO LOSE PFEFFER.

Brooklyn Twirler Ordered to Report for Naval Service Tuesday.

The Brooklyn club suffered another severe loss yesterday when Pitcher Ed Pfeffer of the Dodgers was notified to report to the naval auxiliary force at Chicago on Tuesday, the day of the National League opening. Manager Robinson has been figuring on Pfeffer's return, and hoped that he would not be called until later in the season. The loss of the big pitcher will weaken the Brooklyn pitching staff, and it will be necessary for the Dodger leader to go out and get another boxman.

Pfeffer surprised and delighted Manager Robinson when he reported at Hot Springs with the news that he would be able to pitch for at least two months before being called. He received a month to month contract. Robinson has been banking on Pfeffer to help out the club during the early weeks of the season. The draft and enlistments have hit the Brooklyns hard, and the club has already lost Sherrod Smith, Leon Cadore, and John Miljus, pitchers, and Chuck Ward and Malone, two of the infielders. Zach Wheat has also been lost to the club, as he would not agree to sign his contract at terms offered him by President Ebbets.

MAJOR LEAGUE CLUBS PRIMED FOR PREMIER

Yankees, Red Sox, Athletics, and Senators to Get a Running Start in Annual Flag Races Tomorrow

The baseball season of 1918 will get under way tomorrow, when the eastern clubs of the American League will get a running start on their rivals. The Yankees open with Washington in the National capital, and the Red Sox entertain the Athletics in Boston. The other clubs of the two major circuits will start the season on Tuesday, the Giants opening with the Brooklyns at the Polo Grounds.

The attraction at the Polo Grounds on Tuesday marks the first time the Giants have opened the season here in three years, and with the Dodgers as opponents the occasion has unusual interest for the fans. The game will start at 3 o'clock, but long before that time there will be a band concert and parade. Peanuts, hot frankfurters, and popcorn will no longer have a monopoly, for as side attractions at the ball games Liberty boads and Thrift Stamps will also be on sale. General William A. Mann will throw out the first ball.

Just what sort of a baseball season this is going to be, under war conditions, is problematical. The war had little effect on the game last season, but as the seriousness of the grim struggle becomes more impressed upon the public during the coming season there may be a lack of interest in baseball. The long casualty lists are sure to have a depressing effect on the game just as they did in England and Australia, where sport is now at a low ebb. The club owners realize that there is much uncertainty about the season, but nevertheless are going ahead on the supposition that the game will furnish a relaxation and diversion, which the public needs now more than ever before.

There is much uncertainty about the players. Although none of the clubs have been so badly crippled by losing players through the draft or enlistments that they are noticeably weak, there will be many players called during the next few months.

Kauff May Go Soon.

Among the players who are sure to be called before the season is many weeks old are stars whose loss will weaken the clubs of which they are members. Benny Kauff of the Giants, one of the strongest batsmen of McGraw's National League champions, will probably be lost to the club early in the season, and it is certain that no player can be substituted who can make up for Benny's batting strength. There are many other clubs in this same predicament, and before the season is over baseball fans are likely to see many surprising changes in the makeup of the major league clubs.

The numerous changes which threaten nearly all of the major league clubs leave the pennant races in both leagues enveloped in doubt. Clubs which may have unusual playing strength early in the season may find themselves second division propositions toward the end of the season. Just now it looks as if the Chicago White Sox in the American League and the Giants in the National League would have little trouble in repeating the success of last season, but with the element of uncertainty which the possibilities of the draft bring into the situation great changes are liable to be made in these clubs. The element of doubt about the coming season makes futile any speculation on the relative position of the clubs next Fall.

If the draft does deplete the ranks of the major leagues to any great extent, the season is going to be a great boon for the youthful ball player under draft age. There are numerous youngsters in schools and in minor leagues who have great possibilities, but who never are able to get a chance against the finished products which usually monopolize the berths in the big organizations. This season it may be necessary to try out these young players, and before the year is over many of the recruits who have been farmed out may have to be recalled.

Baseball a Benefit.

President John K. Tener of the National League is optimistic about the coming season and says:

"Baseball, in common with all other outdoor sports, in my opinion, should be encouraged in times of war as well as in times of peace. Baseball really had its origin during the civil war, when soldiers in that great conflict benefited themselves physically and in spirit by engaging in this then new game. This was true with the soldiers in our war with Spain, as it is true with our brave boys today who have enlisted under the colors and are either in the camps here or at the front in France.

"From the very inception of the present war England has realized that to keep her soldiers fit they must be given opportunity to indulge in their favorite sports, and by Government appropriation that country has used a large sum of money for the purchase of athletic paraphernalia for use of the athletes of her army. President Wilson has given every encouragement, too, and in fact has urged the continuance of outdoor sports during the war.

"We all realize, especially at this hour, the pressing call that is upon each of us to aid our country in doing all in our power to quickly furnish men and means to combat the enemy and to insure an early and complete victory to our arms, and this effort will be best sustained by getting into the open and into the sunshine occasionally and by either witnessing or participating in outdoor sports to gain that health and vigor and alertness of intellect necessary to do well the work that may come to our hand.

"Canada for years past has played and accepted baseball almost to the exclusion of other Summer sports, and has carried the game into England, and with our own boys, is now playing it in France, where in fact all the troops of the allied armies engage in playing our national game, which seems to have in it the very spirit and inspiration that fit the player for the supreme effort of the soldier. While we must all do our utmost for our country at this time, we must also have our hour of recreation, and to recreate the body and sharpen our senses I know of no better tonic than baseball."

Many Clubs Changed.

The fact that there have been more trades and sales of ball players during the last Winter than during any other year in the history of the game brings many new faces to several clubs. The big shakeup in players is taken as a good thing by club owners, who believe it will tend to equalize the playing strength in many instances. In the National League nineteen players have changed their uniforms, and the various trades involved such prominent players as Alexander, Herzog, Larry Doyle, Al Mamaux, Stengel, Tyler, Barnes, Paskert, and others.

In the American League there have been even more changes, and no less than twenty-four players of the Ban Johnson circuit have changed clubs. These include more of the Athletics and Boston Red Sox than any other club, although many changes have been made in the ranks of the Yankees. Among the American League players who will have new homes this season are Pratt, Bodie, Bush, Scinnis, Pfeffer, Walker, Schang, Strunk, Shotten, and several others.

Much interest in the American League is centred right here in New York, where Miller Huggins, formerly manager of the St. Louis club of the National League, will undertake the difficult task of placing the Yankees on the baseball map. The Yanks have had a long string of managers, but none has ever looked so good as Huggins. He has, in the first place, strengthened the club in both fielding and batting.

Second base has been a weak spot on the Yankee club for many years, and Huggins filled up this gap by getting Pratt from St. Louis. Pratt also lends added batting strength. Ping Bodie is another addition which should give the New York club the batting ability lacking in the past. While the pitching staff has not been improved, it is believed that Huggins will get better results from his flingers than his predecessors.

The Yankees finished in sixth place in the pennant race last season, but it looks as if Huggins during his first season here will be able to better this position.

Barrow Looks for Results.

Another new manager in the American League is Ed Barrow, formerly President of the International League. Barrow succeeds Jack Barry with the Red Sox, and with his thorough knowledge of the game and his long experience in baseball affairs it is believed that he will be able to make a strong bid for the American League pennant with the strong bunch of players under his command in Boston. The Red Sox have been pretty badly affected by the draft and enlistments, but President Frazee has gathered many players to his banner and the club will be able to start the season with a strong front.

The only new manager in the National League is Jack Hendricks of the St. Louis Cardinals, who had great success at Indianapolis in the American Association. Hendricks makes his début as a big league leader, and great success is predicted for him. Jack Miller and Marvin Goodwin have been lost to the Cards, which leaves a big gap in the club, but Betzel and Sherdell have been picked to fill the places of the men who have donned the khaki. Hornsby, one of the greatest young players of the game, will again be with the club.

Hugo Bezdek will start his first season as manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates. He succeeded Jimmy Callahan in Pittsburgh about the middle of last season, and had no chance to put his own ideas into effect. Formerly a college baseball and football coach, Bezdek has put many of his college policies into effect in training the Pirates this Spring, and last year's tail-enders are booked for a higher rating this season.

Reds Rivals of Giants.

In the National League Cincinnati now looms up as a strong opponent of the Giants. With the exception of Toney and Kopf, Manager Christy Mathewson will have the same team as last season, strengthened by the addition of several youngsters. With such hard hitters as Roush, the leading batsman of the league last season; Hal Chase, Groh, Neale, and Griffith, the Cincinnati club is sure to command respect. Mathewson has worked out many original ideas in his training season at Montgomery, and although the club's showing against the Detroit Tigers in the Spring games was somewhat disappointing, the Cincinnati fans look for their club to finish even better than fourth place, where Matty landed them last season.

The Chicago Cubs looked unusually strong until Alexander was drafted. Manager Mitchell has had the advantage of buying whatever he could gather in the baseball market, and as a result Alexander, Killifer, Paskert, and Tyler were among the valuable players added to the Chicago roster. Chicago's pitching staff with Alexander, Vaughn, Douglas, Tyler, Carter, and Hendrix, seemed the strongest staff in the league, but the Cubs' chances are lessened by losing Alexander. The infield is uncertain because it is made up of youngsters. The most promising of these is Charley Hollocher, a shortstop from the Pacific Coast.

Brooklyn has been hit hard by the draft and enlistments, but Manager Robinson has made changes during the Winter which are calculated to bring more harmony to the club. In trading Stengel and Cutshaw to Pittsburgh the morale of the club has been improved, as these players have been blamed for much of the lack of harmony on the Dodgers last season.

New Club to Brooklyn.

The Brooklyn Club has an unusually difficult task before it this Summer, and even the most optimistic fan across the bridge cannot see very much in store for Robbie's team. Cadore, Sherrod Smith, and Mitljus, three pitchers of worth, have been lost through enlistments. Ward, one of the players received from the Pittsburgh trade, has also entered the service. O'Mara will have another trial, and a recruit, Schmandt, will be tried at second base. Zach Wheat, the club's best hitter, is a holdout, and Ed Pfeffer, their best pitcher, is subject to the call of the navy any day. The club this year is lacking in reserve material, and if any of the regulars sustain serious injuries it would be in a bad way.

As for the Giants, they enter the race with about the same playing strength which marked the club last season. There will be a few changes. Herzog will be gone from second and Larry Doyle will be back on his old job. Just how Doyle will be able to play is doubtful, but thus far he has measured up to the task in exhibition games. Robertson is lost in right field, and in his place is Ross Young, who will probably be able to more than fill the bill, as he looks like the best youngster who has broken into the big leagues in many years. McGraw has strengthened his pitching staff with Jess Barnes of Boston, and will rely on his pitching staff of last year for most of the work.

All the managers enter the pennant races this season realizing that war conditions may at any time upset the calculations they have been making for months. Many clubs have cut down salaries and retrenched in many other ways in anticipation of a season which may become seriously affected by the uncertainty of war.

NAME UMPIRES FOR OPENING

Rigler and Moran to Handle Giant-Dodger Game.

President Tener of the National League announced yesterday that Charles Rigler and Charles Moran would be the umpires at the opening game of the National League season between the Giants and the Dodgers at the Polo Grounds on Tuesday. Moran is the new official who was appointed last Winter. He was a former football player and coach, and was an umpire in the Southern Association.

The other appointments are Henry O'Day and William Byron, at Cincinnati; William Klem and Robert Emslie, at Philadelphia, and Ernest Quigley and Peter Harrison, at St. Louis.

Arrangements are being made to boom the sale of Liberty bonds at the opening game Tuesday. The old press box just back of the plate will be used as a Liberty Hall booth for the sale of the bonds, and all the Giants and Brooklyn players will go through the crowd selling bonds. A prize will be given to the ball player who sells the most bonds. The bond sale at the Polo Grounds will be in charge of Lieutenant Marty McHale, the former pitcher of the Yankees.

LAJOIE LOST TO DODGERS.

National Commission Declares Veteran a Free Agent.

All hope of Brooklyn landing Larry Lajoie this season was dispelled yesterday when the National Commission at Cincinnati annulled the sale of the player by Toronto to President Ebbets. Lajoie is now a free agent the same as the other players of the defunct International League, and he will manage the Indianapolis club of the American Association for James C. McGill.

Lajoie was sold to Brooklyn for $3,000 a few days before the International League voted to disband. Lajoie had previously promised McGill that if the International League did not operate he would manage the Indianapolis club. Lajoie supposed that he would be declared a free agent just as the other players.

While Brooklyn was anxious to get Lajoie to play one of the infield positions, President Ebbets, after he had talked with Lajoie, decided that after his long and honorable service in the major leagues he deserved a better fate than being bartered about like a hush leaguer without being consulted in the matter. Lajoie appealed to the commission asking that the sale to Brooklyn be annulled, and he is now free to take the job in Indianapolis.

When President McGill was here consulting with Lajoie a few weeks ago he stated that the big Frenchman would be paid a larger salary than had ever been paid to a minor league manager.

TRIS SPEAKER'S RUN DOWNS THE GIANTS

Cleveland Takes Exciting Ten-Inning Game from New York and Ties Up Series.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 13.—The Cleveland team won a 5 to 4 victory over the Giants this afternoon in a ten-inning game of the series. This victory ties up the series with each team winning three contests and tieing in the other.

Tris Speaker was the one that actually broke up the game. He managed to single through right and stole second. A wild pitch placed him on third, and he came home with the winning run when Miller singled through centre.

The teams leave here this evening for their respective cities. The Giants are due to arrive in New York tomorrow night around 11 o'clock. Causey pitched the first five innings, and was then replaced by Smith. When Causey retired McGraw took Rariden, Burns, and Zimmerman out and replaced them with Gibson, Thorpe, and Rodriguez.

At this period the Giants were leading 3 to 1. They gathered an additional run in the eighth, but the Indians tied the score in their part of the frame. Smith passed two men, which cost two runs.

Before the game the Giants were guests of John E. Madden, the famous horseman and breeder. He entertained then at his famous Hamburg Farm.

FOURTH COMPANY SWIMMERS IN VAN

Conquer First Company Natators in U. S. Navy Electrical School Meet.

Sailor swimmers representing the Fourth Company of the United States Navy Electrical School scored a triumph in the annual intercompany swimming meet, held yesterday morning in the Central Y. M. C. A., Brooklyn, pool, under the auspices of the Naval Branch of the Y. M. C. A. in Brooklyn. They corralled a total of nineteen events for the five events in which competition was held and led the First Company swimmers by three points. This triumph gave the Fourth Company natators the loving cup offered to the team making the best point showing.

In the individual struggle for stellar honors of the meet a tie resulted between Penrch and Jackson, both of the First Company. Each had a total of six points, and the deadlock will be decided by the toss of a coin. To the successful swimmer a gold medal will be awarded. Three other swimmers also tied in the race for individual laurels, Scott of the Sixth and Palmer and Seely of the Fourth Company all finishing the meet with five tallies to their credit.

Eight companies of the Electrical School were represented in the meet, making one of the most successful in the history of the Naval Y. M. C. A. The other companies which failed to make a showing in the point tabulation, were the Second and Fifth. About fifty natators competed in the five events arranged, and throughout the meet partisan enthusiasm ran high. About 250 admirers of the teams participating crowded into the spacious pool and on three seprnate occasions the officials had to call a halt to the competitions to allow the din set up as the races progressed to subside.

The most spectacular event was the 100-yard relay swim, in which the team representing the Fourth Company pulled through with a victory after a hard struggle. This victory gave the Fourth Company's team its fourth triumph of the meet and the enthusiasm of the team's supporters knew no bounds. The First Company team started off in the lead, and maintained a slight advantage over the first half of the race.

Then the Fourth Company swimmers showed to the front and held a slight lead to the finish. In the final stages of the race the First Company swimmers were forced to take the wake of the other teams, the Eighth Company annexing second and the Sixth Company third place. The time was 1:05 4-5.

In the 100-yard swim, Seely of the Fourth Company scored an impressive victory, easily outswimming his field of rivals, and winning in the good time of 1:21.

The summaries.

25-Yard Swim.—Won by Palmer, 4th Company; Danforth, 8th Company, second; Myers, 7th Company, third; Jackson, 1st Company, fourth. Time—0:15 3-5.

ATHLETIC TRAINERS TO PLAN WAR WORK

LEADERS TO BE PRESENT

Men Who Will Direct Recreation for Soldiers Abroad to Attend Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

Nearly a hundred prominent athletic trainers and coaches from all over the country will meet at Garden City on Tuesday and Wednesday in a conference called by the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. All of them have enlisted under the Red Triangle and are leaving for their posts in the United States to go overseas and direct the physical recreation of the American expeditionary forces.

In the very nature of things, a brief conference such as has been arranged for the men on the eve of their sailing abroad is not expected to result in the formulation of any extensive and definite program, but Dr. George J. Fisher of the physical department of the Y. M. C. A. hopes to effect an agreement on fundamentals. Mass play is the particular feature of the training which is conducted in the camps behind the lines. The aim of the directors of the movement is to provide healthy recreation for the fighting men and thereby improve their morale so that they will be better fighters in the trenches.

Describing the foundation on which the work of the Y. M. C. A. is based, Dr. Fisher said yesterday:

"The high athletic command at an American university would not think of sending into an important intercollegiate contest a team—football, baseball, or track—that had not been trained for the battle. How foolish, then, to think that we can win the greatest battle ever waged unless our team is properly trained. France and Italy have seen the wnnders of the system installed by the Y. M. C. A. at the request of the United States Government, and have increased our recruiting problems by asking that we supply them with trainers in the guise of hut secretaries and physical directors."

Heads of the various departments into which the Y. M. C. A. divides the country for administrative purposes have been instructed to have their men in Garden City by Tuesday evening. The conference will continue all day Wednesday. Just who will take part in the conference cannot be stated with accuracy until the men arrive, but it is safe to say that Dave Fultz, Sparrow Robertson, and other men as well known in athletics will be present. Jack Magee of Bowdoin and some of the other men upon whom the Y. M. C. A. places much reliance for valuable work overseas will not be able to leave their present positions until later in the Spring.

Dr. Fisher hopes to have at Garden City for at least one session such men as W. S. Langford, Big Bill Edwards, and Brink Thorne, whose work as members of the College Committee on Recruiting has been so successful in obtaining the service of such men as have given up their work here to go into the service overseas.

KAUFMAN SETS FAST PACE IN TITLE RUN

Brooklyn Athlete Easily Wins Title in Cross-Country Chase.

Running along easily, Louis R. Kaufman of the Brooklyn A. A. yesterday crossed the finish line a winner of the annual junior Metropolitan Association A. A. U. cross-country championship race at Van Cortlandt Park. The Brooklyn harrier, without being forced to extend himself to his limit, triumphed by a margin of some seventy-five yards over Alexander Feher, the sturdy little Hungarian-American A. C. distance runner, in the excellent time of 30:37. The time was exceptional, in view of the unfavorable weather conditions.

In his triumph, Kaufman clearly demonstrated superiority over a field of fifty-eight of the foremost junior harriers in the local district. The fast pace set by Kaufman forced the retirement from the race of thirteen of the original starters, and there were others, as they crossed the finish line, who showed the effects of the Brooklynite's stiff stride. Harry Parkinson of the Morningside A. C., who finished eighteenth, collapsed at the end of the journey, and had to be carried to his dressing quarters.

Kaufman went to the lead at the outset and never was headed. The action of the officials in eliminating the stiffest parts of the course was just to his liking, and he started away at a merry pace, which soon gave him the van position as the runners strung out Indian file.

The Brooklynite passed under the first railroad bridge after the start slightly in the lead of J. Losgar, St. Anselm's A. C., and on the initial circuit of the three-mile course, which had to be covered twice, Kaufman gradually opened a gap between himself and the remainder of the field, headed by Losgar. Crossing the starting point at the end of the first lap, Kaufman was timed in 15:05, and he was leading Losgar by twenty yards or so. Following Losgar came Fred Travelena of the Mohawk A. C.; Andy Craw, Brooklyn A. A.; Otto Laakso, Kaleva A. C.; Alexander Feher, Hungarian-American A. C., and Eddie Wiemann, Morningside A. C.

Entering the short hack hill on the last leg of his journey, Kaufman was leading by fifty yards, while Feher had displaced Losgar as the second runner. The Brooklyn harrier, on the flat for the final stages of his journey, seemed to fly away from his opponents, and at the end won by about seventy-five yards.

The Morningside A. C. harriers for the second consecutive year accounted for the team laurels, finishing with 39 points. St. Christopher Club was second with 59, and Brooklyn A. A. third with 64.

The race differed from those of former years in that there were fewer starters. Also a batch of soldier-harriers from the 102d Engineers at Camp Humphries, Bellvoir, Va., gave a tone to the event in keeping with the present times. J. Flynn was the first of the soldiers home, finishing in twenteth place in 32:52.

ROBINS AND YANKEES IDLE.

Weather Again Prevents Preliminary Fray at Ebbets Field.

The momentous question as to whether the Yankees or the Dodgers are the better baseball club will have to be decided by plain, ordinary argument methods because yesterday's game at Ebbets Field was canceled on account of the poor condition of the field.

The clubs were to have played two games, and Manager Huggins was anxious to play the Dodgers, as they are a stronger club than the Boston Braves, who couldn't even give the Yankees a stiff argument in the South. The Yankee-Dodgers series will now have to go over until next year.

The Yankees and Boston Braves are scheduled to play an exhibition game this afternoon at the International League Park in Newark. The game will start at 2 o'clock.

CLINTON SWIMMERS WIN.

Commerce Beaten in Dual Meet at City College, 53 to 6.

De Witt Clinton High School's swimming team added another victory to its list in the chase for the local junior high school indoor swimming title now being conducted by the Public Schools Athletic League. In the pool of the City College yesterday morning the Clinton natators trounced the High School of Commerce by 53 points to 6. The other scheduled meets failed to materialize, Erasmus Hall forfeiting to Townsend Harris, and Manual allowing its meet with Stuyvesant to go by default.

The victory of De Witt Clinton, with Stuyvesant's triumph by default, places these two schools in the lead for the title, each team having won three meets and lost none. Townsend is third, with two victories and one defeat, and Commerce, with one triumph and two reverses, fourth. Erasmus swimmers are fifth, with three defeats. Manual announced its withdrawal from the tournament.

Sam Kreisler of De Witt Clinton was the individual star of the meet, winning the fancy diving contest and 200-foot breast stroke swim. In the breast stroke test Kreisler was clocked in 1:03 3-5.

Rubins, the De Witt Clinton short-distance swimmer, bettered his own record for the tournament at 50-yards. He won this event by a close margin over Cahn of Commerce, in 0:30 4-5. His best previous time for the distance was 0:33.

The summaries:

WANTED
MAN TO SELECT EMPLOYES FOR RESPONSIBLE POSITIONS.
A large manufacturing corporation (near Cleveland) has a permanent position to offer a man who is qualified to conduct interviews and handle applications for positions in its sales and executive departments.

We have in mind a man between 30 and 38 years of age, of prepossessing appearance, with a knowledge of practical business procedure and organization; one who not only has an unusual endowment of good common sense, but also the ability to exercise it.

We prefer a man who has made some study of his fellows; one who can quickly analyze the applicant's qualifications and place him where his native ability and experience best fit him.

This is work which calls for a fine balance between theory and practice; we are not looking for an ordinary employment interviewer who handles the usual run of clerical and factory help; the man we want will be required to select applicants for the more important positions; employment experience is not essential, as we will thoroughly train the man before assigning him to this position.

Our organization is 50 years old and the largest in its field; this opportunity should be investigated by the qualified man who for some legitimate reason has not been able to develop in accordance with his ability and energy; the increasing responsibilities of this position and the identity which a man can establish for himself in our organization will provide for satisfactory advancement; we would prefer to promote a man who has developed in our own organization, but existing conditions have made it necessary to assign all men who would qualify to other positions.

The necessity for inserting this ad "blind" will be obvious to the man who has had experience in organization building; however, you need not hesitate to give complete details in your application letter, as it will be handled strictly confidential; please state completely your age, education, experience, domestic status, present salary, and reasons for believing you are qualified for this position. Address replies to Y 351 Times Annex.

Located on a quiet residential street, they have an unusual charm of appearance which makes them notable even in the Gardens. On account of the shortage of housing facilities rents have increased and will continue to rise. Any thoughtful person will realize that it is cheaper now to own a home that can be purchased on a small cash investment, paying the balance as rent. The supply of new houses is limited and the future cost of building will be excessive.

The environment is pleasanter than in Manhattan.
The floor space is cheaper than living in Manhattan.
The accessibility to the business, shopping and theatre districts is equal to living in Manhattan.
The frequency of electric trains, with a running schedule of fifteen minutes, discourages the idea of commuting.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS IN THE REAL ESTATE WORLD

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET

Market Conditions Quiet, with Demand Centring Upon Small Properties.

COMMENT AND OPINION

A Suggestion to the Liberty Loan Campaigners—Passing of the 1918 Legislature.

Quietude prevailed in the real estate market last week, business concerning itself in comparatively limited volume, with small and moderate-priced properties.

Prominent in the selling market was the tendency on the part of a number of loaning institutions to dispose of properities acquired at foreclosure. An encouraging element in these transactions is the policy of the lender to take back a purchase money mortgage for a five-year term at 5 per cent. Since the great drawback to so many real estate transactions has been the placing of a mortgage both for a long term and at a reasonable rate of interest, this disposition on the part of lending institutions may be regarded as a new and favorable factor entering into the general real estate situation.

In the Realty Liberty Bond Drive.

A new suggestion has been advanced to aid in the drive launched by the Real Estate Board's Liberty Loan Committee on behalf of the Third Liberty Loan. The fifteen teams comprising 150 of the most aggressive and earnest brokers in the city have been engaged in an enthusiastic canvass for subscriptions from real estate interests of all descriptions and having well-nigh exhausted all prospects, are seeking new fields.

The new suggestion advanced is to the effect that lending institutions accept Liberty bonds as payment toward the reduction of mortgages. In the opinion of many board members, large sums will be available for release into the Liberty Loan field, if this suggestion is put into practice because a number of property owners, expecting demands on the part of lenders, have accumulated large amounts of cash.

The principal objection to this plan, it would seem at first examination, is the question of interest. The bond would return 4¼ per cent., whereas the lending institutions, especially the title companies would be paying out 5 and 6½ per cent.

With guaranteed mortgages coming due, which the title companies have to liquidate plus interest at the rate of 5 per cent., the question would naturally arise as to how the difference would be made up between this rate and the rate of interest paid by the Government.

This point was raised at the Real Estate Board rooms the other day, but brokers claimed the total of payments which will be made on call will not be of sufficient size to figure materially in the mortgage market. Anticipating a call, many property owners are holding money in banks which they would likely put in Liberty bonds, if they did not fear a demand for cash for the reduction of mortgages.

1918 Legislation for Realty.

Closing days of the State Legislature brought with them little hope that real estate had benefited by the present session. As one reviewer has summed up its career "it will be known not for what it did do but for what it did not do." Its work has been negative rather than positive.

"This year's crop of new laws is of the pre-election color," says the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests. The result is a comparatively low State budget but practically no constructive legislation, thus contrasting sharply with the larger appropriations and the important laws expected of the next or post-election legislature. We have had a surfeit of foolish bills and a notable absence of important measures. Fortunately, the legislative frenzy for useless war projects spent itself in 1917.

"The State budget at $80,000,000 is probably lower than it should be and yet it contains many items which any business man knows should be stricken out. The direct tax will be $13,000,000.

"Tax measures are unpopular with politicians, especially just, before election. The public credit of New York City and a tax system not only for this and other communities is recognized. In fact, they have realized more than ever before that the needs of real property are bound up with the demands of public credit and the business interests of all citizens. While admitting the advantages of the proposed tax limit law for realty, the bills proposed were found to violate the existing rules of public finance—also of practical politics.

"Measures affecting the regulatory powers of the State, both as to persons and as to property, were unpopular. The 1918 field day for panaceas, anticipated by the radicals and upliters of all breeds, received an unusually cool reception. In fact, the leaders were sobered by the National responsibilities of the hour and were not impressed by the fads and fancies of city farmers and Fifth Avenue slummers.

"Needed constructive measures have been discussed in a way that may justify thorough, rather than piecemeal, legislation along the lines of tax reform, real estate financing, public pensions and similar benefits, control of utilities, development of water powers, &c."

Opera House Clear of Debt.

On May 1 a mortgage for $1,000,000 held by the United States Trust Company, which has encumbered the Metropolitan Opera House property since it was purchased by the present owners some twenty-five years ago, will be paid off. This was agreed upon at a recent meeting of the stockholders following the presentation of the proposition by the Executive Committee, consisting of Augustus D. Juilliard, George F. Baker, Henry A. C. Taylor, George Henry Warren, and George G. Haven. The mortgage will be liquidated through the payment of $20,000 for each box by April 15, thus yielding $1,000,000 with which to meet the mortgage obligation, as well as the coupons due on that date. Without the mortgage obligation the annual assessment per box will be reduced from $4,500 to $3,000, representing a saving of $1,500 per year to each owner.

WOMEN ELEVATOR RUNNERS.

Their Value Discussed by Building Managers' Association.

Dr. William F. Doyle, the new Chief of the Fire Prevention Bureau, and William E. Walsh, the new head of the Manhattan Building Bureau, were guests at the monthly dinner of the New York Building Managers' Association last week.

Dr. Doyle frankly admitted that he knew very little about fire prevention and labor laws, but promised hearty cooperation. In the course of his remarks Dr. Doyle said that on taking office he found the bureau full of experts and "Mr. Fixers," and the general administration a matter of experts making reports to experts, with an intermingling of "Little Czars" to oversee what the experts did to each other and write opinions. Meanwhile, orders were issued and rescinded, with no set purpose in view, so he thought it was time to manage the bureau differently by curbing the "experts" and the "Little Czars" who handled the public as they pleased without taking any action. It was this situation, Dr. Doyle said, that prompted him to organize the Board Review to co-operate with the public, to review acts of subordinates of the bureau, do away with star-chamber proceedings, and transact business in the open.

William E. Walsh, the new head of the Manhattan Building Bureau, said that while he was in office this department would not be operated on correctional institution lines, but, while applying a literal interpretation of the law, there would be infused a large degree of common sense, and with no taking of snap judgments.

The value of women elevator operators in office buildings and apartment houses was the subject of a general discussion. Oscar Foley of the Equitable Building Company said that women were failures as operators of elevators in large business buildings because of the cars' high speed, which bewilders them. Then, too, the construction of the car and the heavy doors are such as to more than tax the strength of the average woman.

He said the Equitable Building Company, which has foreseen a shortage of elevator men, tried women in two of its cars and found they were not all that could be desired. One was a strong woman, who was able to slide back and forth the gates, but the speed of the car, about 500 feet a minute, was too much for her. The other was similarly affected. The women operators, Mr. Foley said, required many relief periods in order to keep going.

W. E. Barton of the firm of Pease & Elliman, which controls a large number of the finest apartment houses on the east side, said that the one drawback to women elevator operators in apartment houses was their inclination to gossip.

Mr. Barton declared, however, that the woman operator had come to stay as a result of the shortage of male operators. Nothing is being saved, said Mr. Barton, in the employment of women operators, since they were being paid from $40 to $50 a month. As they gain in knowledge they demand more money. Then, too, rest rooms must be provided and other conveniences not necessary with male operators installed. So far women have not been used at night.

Queens Borough Building.

Plans have been filed in Queens for a one-story brick school building, with a frontage of 40 feet and a depth of 78 feet, to be erected at a cost of $20,000 by the Congregation Derech Emmoh, on the west side of Beach Sixty-seventh Street, 70 feet south of Ocean Avenue, Arverne.

The Neponsit Realty Company has filed plans for three $10,000 single-family dwellings to be erected at Neponsit on the northwest corner of Washington Avenue and Dakota Street; east side of Adirondack Boulevard, 300 feet south of Washington Avenue, and east side of Bannock Boulevard, 100 feet north of Washington Avenue.

Joseph Rubin has filed plans for four semi-detached dwellings to cost $9,000 each, and each to accommodate two families, to be erected at Richmond Hill. Two of the buildings will be located on the east side of Church Street, at the north corner of Metropolitan Avenue, and two will be erected on the west side of Lefferts Avenue at the north corner of Metropolitan Avenue.

Loan Associations' Convention.

The thirty-first annual convention of the New York State League of Savings and Loan Associations will be held at Saratoga Springs June 20 and 21.

The regular programme of the convention will include. "The Question Box," unusual financial issues developed by the war, addresses by Walter Scott, Anning S. Prall, Secretary of the North Shore Association of Richmond Borough and member of the New York City Board of Education; Sydney W. Stern, and John G. Farwell, the last named on "The Relation of the Banker to the Savings and Loan Association."

Real Estate Firm Changes.

William Pierre Jockin, recently with Harris & Vaughan, has opened offices at 80 Broadway for the transaction of a general real estate business.

William Goebel has become associated with Charles S. Kohler at 1,428 St. Nicholas Avenue.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. at a recent meeting of the stockholders increased the number of their present Board of Directors by the election of Henry A. Frey, manager of the business department, and Reginald W. Murray, manager of the agency department.

E. A. Pollack has become associated with Dahnke Brothers.

AMENDED TORRENS LAW BEFORE THE GOVERNOR FOR FINAL CONSIDERATION

Long Campaign for Enactment of Workable Statute in New York Reviewed—Procedure for Registering Titles Under New Legislation Explained in Detail.

Steadily mounting public interest in the land title registration or Torrens system has reached its height in the passage of the Youker-Burlingame bill by both the Assembly and Senate. The bill now awaits the signature of Governor Whitman before its enactment into law.

Edward Polak, Register of Bronx County, who has been actively interested in the Torrens law for many years, discussed yesterday the history of the long fight for the framing and enactment of a workable law and outlined how the efforts of Torrens adherants had finally found expression in the Youker-Burlingame bill.

What the Law Is.

"While the friends of a real Torrene law found it necessary to accept two amendments to the original bill in order to obtain its passage," he said, "still they were successful in obtaining the simplified procedure which will result in attaining the principal purpose of shortening the time of the proceedings and lessening the expense.

"At this point it might be well to define what the Torrens system is, and such definition is given by its creator, Sir Robert Torrens, who started it in Australia:

"The person or persons in whom singly or collectively the fee simple is vested, either at law or in equity, may apply to have the land placed in the register of title. The applications are submitted for examination to a barrister and to a conveyancer, who are styled 'Examiners of Title.'

"In New York, under the Youker bill just passed, the court shall refer the matter to one of the official examiners of title appointed in the county by the Register thereof, said official examiners to be first qualified and admitted by the Court of Appeals.

"These men report to the Register, under the New York law to the Justice of the Supreme Court presiding in the title part, first, whether the description of land is definite and clear. Second, is the applicant in undisputed possession of the property? Third, does he appear in equity and justice rightfully entitled thereto? Fourth, does he produce such evidence of title as leads to the conclusion that no other person is in position to succeed against him in an action for ejectment?

Simplicity of Registration.

"The advantage of the system lies in the simplicity of registration. The Register issues a certificate which describes the nature of the estate of the applicant, and this certificate of title vests the estate indefeasibly in the applicant. This certificate is kept in duplicate by the Register, and the putting together of these duplicates constitutes the registration record.

"But because of the fact that under New York law the system has been cumbersome and costly no use has been made of it. While the law has been in operation since 1906, less than one dozen titles have been registered.

Why the Law Has Been a Failure.

"An inquiry into the scope of the law as it has existed shows the causes for this failure. The New York law has failed to make the system official in all respects. In other words it has permitted attorneys and title companies to act as official examiners instead of restricting the official examination of titles to the Register's Office, where the said titles should be examined by a duly qualified official examiner, appointed by the Register, and responsible only to the public and the courts.

"For eight years the New York law failed to provide for a compulsory assurance fund, and it permitted titles to be withdrawn after registration. No argument is necessary to prove that where there is no requirement that premiums shall be paid into an assurance fund, it naturally follows that no one would have any confidence in such a system, because in the event of a mistake or error there would be no fund in existence out of which to pay claims. The withdrawal provision was bad, because it enabled pressure to be brought against an owner by opponents of the system who were inclined to prevent its growth.

Amended in 1916.

"In 1916 the law was amended to provide for a compulsory assurance fund and to prevent withdrawals of registered titles. However, the fundamental defects of permitting unofficial examinations of titles, the continuance of lengthy, duplicate and costly proceedings, and the failure to amend the assurance fund provisions so as to place the State or county in back of it all together consigned the law to a state of lethargy, and so it still remained unworkable.

"The present recording officers of the five counties in Greater New York, realizing these conditions and recognizing the great benefits to the real estate owners and the city to be gained from a really workable Torrene law, decided to form themselves into a committee for the attainment of that purpose. I was made the Chairman of the committee; Register Richardson Webster of Kings County, Secretary; James A. Donegan, Register of New York County; Alexander Dujat, County Clerk of Queens County, and C. Livingston Bostwick, County Clerk of Richmond County, were the other members of the committee.

"After holding a number of meetings we drafted a bill and had it introduced in the Senate by Senator John V. Sheridan of the Bronx, and in the Assembly by Franklin A. Coles from Nassau County. Later these two bills were merged by the Assembly Committee on General Laws and the Senate Judiciary Committee into the Youker-Burlingame bill. This bill represents the views of the five recording officers of New York City, the Torrens Title League, of which ex-Register John J. Hopper, J. Clarence Davies, and Walter Fairchild are the leading supporters, and many realty interests and taxpayers' associations which have indorsed it.

Provisions of the Youker Bill.

"The Youker bill (Print. No. 1445, Int. No. 9) containing all the remaining amendments that could be made to the law, was amended in the Senate, passed and referred back to the Assembly, was concurred in, and is now before the Governor for signature.

"In general it provides for the appointment of official examiners by the Registers of the counties of the State of New York, and the County Clerks where there are no registers in various counties, the said examiners to be attorneys at law and admitted by the Court of Appeals after first passing a severe special examination given by the State Board of Law Examiners. Said examiners are removable by the Appellate Division on charges. Attorneys can no longer be privately employed as official examiners. The Youker bill, as passed in the Assembly, eliminated the title companies as official exsminers, but the Judiciary Committee amended the bill to read that 'the court, in its discretion upon the request of the petitioner, may omit referring the matter to an official examiner of title and in lieu thereof may accept a report on title made and certified by a title insurance company.'

"While this provision leaves it to the discretion of the court as to whether a title company shall act as an official examiner, its effect is not as bad as under the present law, which permits them to act as an official examiner under any circumstances. The title companies have had an opportunity to popularize the law, but have refused to do so. They have therefore no reason to complain if attempts were made to eliminate them entirely.

Procedure Amended.

"The procedure is amended completely, and is similar to that of the Massachusetts law, which has worked satisfactorily and has been declared constitutional by the courts. In general Section 380 and 385 it is provided that the applicant for registration of title shall file his petition with the Supreme Court, which shall refer the matter to an official examiner, and the court directs the Register to give notice of the proceeding to those named in the petition and to such additional persons as the preliminary report of the official examiner shows should be made parties. The determination of the question as to sufficiency of parties and due service shall be for the court. Notice shall be given in three ways: First, by publication in a newspaper published in the county in which the land is situated; second, by registered mail, demanding a return, and such other and further notice as the court may require; third, by posting the notice on each parcel of land affected by the proceeding fourteen days before the return day.

Notice by Publication.

"The return day of the notice shall not be less than twenty days nor more than sixty days after the date of publication, and within seven days of the publication of the notice in a newspaper a copy of the notice is sent by registered mail. The steps to be taken on the return day are entirely constitutional, but lack of space will not permit them to be given in detail here. Any appeal must be taken within thirty days after the final order in the proceeding is entered.

"The Senate Committee failed to retain the amendment contained in the Youker bill which places the county in back of the assurance fund. Upon request the Attorney General rendered a rather short and hasty opinion that the said provision would be unconstitutional. However, we believe that he is entirely wrong and that the provision is constitutional because (1) security of titles is a natural governmental function and not a matter between private individuals. The work is done by a public official and the fees go into the city treasury. (2) The principle of county liability is recognized in statute law. (3) The New York Constitution does not prohibit, and (4) Massachusetts, Illinois, United States Government, and many other States and countries have public assurance funds."

Unfamiliarity with Torrens Law.

On account of the technical features of the law, many property owners have for a long time been struggling to effect an understanding with it, and as many have been greatly discouraged. Fundamentally, the theory is a simple one and the administration is simple, but legal technicalities have been introduced every time the proposed legislation has come up and issues brought in creating considerable confusion to the layman.

For the purpose of presenting briefly and simply the procedure for registering a Torrene title under the new amendments just passed by the Legislature, Walter Fairchild, Secretary and counsel of the Torrens Title League of the State of New York, has prepared a statement which takes a prospective registrant step by step through the entire proceeding, and should clear a number of doubts regarding the administration of the law.

The statement follows:

Where to Apply.

"Application to register a title is made by filing a petition addressed to the Supreme Court. The law directs the Registrar to print forms for the petition and other papers, and supply them to applicants free of charge or for a nominal sum.

"In the counties of New York, Kings, Bronx, and Westchester, the Register of Deeds is the Registrar. In all other counties the County Clerk acts as Registrar. In practice, therefore, a person wishing to register his title should go to the Registrar's office and procure a form of petition to fill out. The Registrar's office will answer any questions and assist the applicant.

Who May Apply.

"Any owner may have his title registered, or any holder of a contract to purchase. He may apply in person or through his attorney. Many people may prefer to have an attorney look after the matter, but the amount of work involved is small, and the attorney should charge only a nominal fee for his services. The actual work of examining the title and of conducting the proceedings is done by the Registrar's office, for which fees are fixed by the statute.

"The public is accustomed to the title company method, by which one goes or sends his attorney to the title company, fills out an application, pays the fees, and—theoretically, at least—the title company takes care of the matter until the title closes and policy issues. So under the new Torrene law the owner or his attorney fills out a similar application, only in the public office instead of with a title company; pays the fees, and the public office does the work until the certificate of title issues. There is this difference, however, in favor of the Torrens way, in that the title company policy is merely guaranteed by a private company and only for the face amount of the policy, whereas the Torrens certificate gives a title which by law is absolutely uncontestable and cannot be attacked in any way.

"A Torrens certificate is safer than any title policy. It gives an owner absolute title.

Steps of Procedure.

"For the benefit of those interested in the actual registration of a title the following summary is made of the steps to be taken and the expense to the owner in an ordinary title. Note that each step after the petition is filed is taken by the public office.

"(1) Apply to the Registrar of your county for a form of petition and a notice. Fill out the petition and the notice and file them in the County Clerk's office, and file a copy of the notice with the Registrar. The filing fee with the Registrar is $1.

"(2) As soon as the petition is filed the court will enter an order directing the official examiner who is employed in the Registrar's office to examine the title and directing the Registrar to give notice of the hearing.

"The Registrar then sets a day for the hearing, as ordered by the court, which must be at least twenty days in advance, and issues a formal notice, which is published in a newspaper, posted on the land, and a copy sent by registered mail to each person interested in the title, including the owners of abutting properties. The Registrar's office attends to this, the owner paying the actual expense.

"(3) The official examiner examines the title for the court just as a title company examiner does for his company, and makes a report which is ready for the court upon the day of the hearing. The examiner checks up the petition and sees to it that all necessary parties have been named and served with the notice. The examiner's report covers every phase of title, including the reading of the survey, which must be furnished by the applicant. The examiner's fee is $10 plus $1 a thousand on the assessed value of the property, and is paid to the Registrar. The survey charge depends on the surveyor, but is about $15 for a city lot.

"(4) Upon the day of the hearing, if no fault is found with the title, the court enters a final order of registration, directing the Registrar to issue a certificate of title to the owner. For this first certificate the Registrar charges $5 and the owner then pays the assurance premium of $1 a thousand of the assessed value of the property.

"The face of the certificate shows the name of the owner and the description of the property and on the back appear the mortgages and any other encumbrance there may be. No 'exceptions' as to indefinite rights are permitted. Any unsettled questions that may arise are determined once for all by the court.

Contract of Sale.

"If the petition is filed by the holder of a contract the certificate is issued directly to the purchaser upon the delivery of the closing deed.

"It takes from twenty to thirty days to complete the initial proceeding so that a purchaser can register title under the usual thirty day contract. The contract must be acknowledged and filed with the petition. It is good practice to insert a clause in the contract to the effect that it is understood the purchasor intends to apply to have the title registered and that the seller has a good title that may be registered and consents to such registration.

Cost of Initial Registration.

"As the amount of the examiner's fee and of the assurance premium is based on the assessed value of the property the cost of the initial registration varies accordingly. The fees for a $50,000 property are estimated as follows:

(1) Filing notice of petition	$1
(2) Publishing, mailing, and posting notice, (estimated average)	15
(3) Examiner's fee, (10 plus $1 a thousand of value)	60
(4) Assurance premium, ($1 a thousand)	50
First certificate	5
Total	$131

"Formula: For easy computation the fees for the first registration may be estimated by taking $2 a thousand on the value of the property and adding $31. For $10,000 the fees would be $51; for $20,000 the fees would be $71, &c.

"To this must be added the cost of the survey, which will be $15 and upward. This is exclusive of the attorney's fee, which, of course, is a matter of arrangement, but as the amount of work is nominal an attorney could well afford to do it for a fee of $25.

Subsequent Transfers.

"The foregoing expense and time are required for the first registration only. After the first time, all that is needed to transfer title is to take the certificate to the Registrar, who cancels it and issues a new one to the purchaser. This can be done in an hour's time and costs $3. To register a mortgage or a lease costs $1.

"The assurance premium is paid once for all, and covers all future dealings. No re-examination or searching of title is ever again necessary.

"This is the great advantage a Torrens certificate has over a title company policy. The title company charges the regular rates over and over again for every reissue, even though the continuation is only for a few weeks.

"Under the Torrens system the work is done once for all and the charge is made once for all. In all subsequent transfers no charge for continuation or for assurance is made. It is all included in the fees for the first registration.

"The fee of $3 charged for issuing the new certificate is simply to pay the office expense for canceling one certificate and issuing a new certificate in its place. It must be remembered also that there are no recording fees under the Torrens system, and the charge of $3 takes the place of the present recording fee for a deed. The charge of $1 made for registering a mortgage is much less than the present recording fee for a mortgage.

"There will be a saving also in the recording office, because the expense of 'recording instruments at length' will be done away with.

"Every person who contemplates the purchase of real estate should insist that his contract provide for the registration of the title, and then should immediately go to the Registrar's office for the necessary forms to fill out to begin the registration proceedings.

"It is only as titles actually become registered that the public and individual owners will reap the benefit of this system which in other communities has done so much to free real estate from unnecessary burdens and to make it a liquid asset."

BRONX OWNERS MEET.

Federation Elects Officers and Appoints Committees.

At a meeting of the Federation of Bronx Real Estate Owners, held at the Bronx Borough Hall on Tuesday evening, the following officers were elected for a term of one year: Morris Morganstern, President; Jacob Leitner, First Vice President; Louis C. Kleban, Second Vice President; Bernard S. Deutsch, Recording Secretary; Emil Leitner, Financial Secretary, and Morris Polsky, Treasurer.

In response to a call for subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan, property owners pledged themselves to buy $10,000 worth of bonds. In order to avoid a repetition of last Winter's coal situation a committee was appointed to interview the local Fuel Administrators, making all efforts to obtain a sufficient supply of coal, and to inform the Administrators that most of the owners are ready to receive the coal and pay for it if they can obtain it.

Bernard S. Deutsch was appointed Chairman, and his associates will be Jacob Bloom, Morris Polsky, S. Osserman, and Harold M. Phillips. The same committee was also instructed to draw up receipts, leases, and various notices that will protect the owners in case of failure of the coal dealers to supply the owners with a sufficient quantity of coal.

PROGRESS ON THE PARKWAY

It Will Be a Drive Forty Feet Wide Along the River.

Good progress is now being made on the Bronx River Parkway Reservation, which extends along the Bronx River for a distance of fifteen miles, from Bronx Park to the new Kensico Dam at Valhalla.

This reservation was created by legislative enactment to preserve the Bronx River from pollution, and its marginal lands from despoliation.

A parkway drive, forty feet wide, and beautifully located along the river, is being built through the full length of the reservation, and is destined to become the most important motor highway approach to New York City from the north.

The first section of this driveway immediately north of Bronx Park and extending to Williamsbridge is now being paved with asphalt blocks, and the work is nearly completed.

From Woodlawn Station north to Wakefield the channel of the Bronx River has been deepened; near Wakefield an enlargement of the river channel is now being dredged to form a lake for boating, bathing, and water sports.

These improvements will prevent the flooding of marginal lands and will put to wholesome use a considerable area that has heretofore been a mosquito-breeding swamp.

GAIN IN STATE'S REVENUES.

Increase of $7,000,000 in General Revenues Shown.

According to the monthly report of State Controller Travis, there was a gain of $7,034,780.71 in the general revenues of the State for the three quarters of the current fiscal year, as compared with the same period of last year; $3,488,516.72 came from direct taxes and $3,546,273.09 from indirect taxes and miscellaneous receipts.

Increases in indirect taxes and receipts were from the tax on corporations, $6,875,239.30; investment tax, (secured debt tax last year,) $361,895.13; motor vehicles, $174,505.75, and fines, fees, duties, and miscellaneous receipts of departments, boards, and institutions, $968,388.98.

Decreases were in the excise (liquor) tax, $1,972,159.54; organization of corporations, $271,465.15; inheritance tax, $874,768.80; stock transfer tax, $1,827,168.08, and mortgage tax, $108,174.43. The decrease in the liquor tax receipts has been occasioned by local option and changes in the law in regard to the distribution of the tax between the State and the localities.

Owing to the war the volume of sales of stock throughout the State has fallen off over 30 per cent., compared with last year, which has had the effect of reducing the sale of stock transfer tax stamps. The general expenditures of the State have increased $11,326,507.66, of which $8,706,358.08 was for the ordinary expenditures and $2,620,149.78 for increased payments for debt services.

HOW CIVIL RIGHTS BILL AFFECTS REAL ESTATE OWNERS

The act recently passed by Congress to extend protection to the civil rights of persons in the military service of the United States is likely to affect the ownership of real estate in many ways.

The purpose of the law is to prevent prejudice or injury to the civil rights of military or naval men during their term of service so as to enable them to devote their entire energy to the needs of the nation.

The law relates to all actions or legal proceedings brought against those in military service and safeguards their rights in every way. For example, a judgment may be set aside at any time within ninety days after the termination of military service in the event that such person was prejudiced by reason of his service to the Government in presenting his defense; actions may be stayed and attachments vacated; the period of military service is excluded in computing the time allowed for the commencement of any action, &c.

The following provisions are of especial importance:

No eviction shall be made during the period of military service in respect to premises for which the agreed rent is less than $50 per month, occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor. Unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, the court may stay the proceedings for not longer than three months, or it may make such other order as may be just.

The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are empowered to order an allotment of the pay of the person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

In any proceeding commenced during the period of military service to enforce an obligation originating prior to March 8, 1918, and secured by mortgage or security upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of period of military service and still so owned by him, arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due, prior to or during the period of such service, the court may stay the proceedings or make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

No person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease, a deposit or installment of a purchase price, from a person, or from the assignor of a person, who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by an action in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Upon the hearing of such action, the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits, or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, order a stay of proceedings, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

Standard Oil Buys.

The property is on the north shore of the Kill van Kull, at the foot of Avenue K. It fronts 621 feet on the Kill van Kull, and extends northerly about 840 feet to the National Docks Railroad. The purchase includes riparian rights.

WAR BOND SALESMEN CANNOT BE DODGED

Many-Sided Appeal Lets Nobody Escape—If One Misses You, Another Gets You in City-Wide Canvass.

TO make the Yorkville district compete with the Greenwich district and the east side with the west; to reach every man in his home and his community and to make him feel that the safety of his home and his community lies in the part he takes in the successful flotation of the Third Liberty Loan—that is the aim of the Metropolitan Canvass Committee of the Third Liberty Loan of the United States. A. B. Leach, senior member of the banking firm of that name, is Chairman of the committee. With him are workingmen holding executive positions in the life insurance and bond selling companies of the city. The Life Insurance Underwriters are represented, so are the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, the New York Life Insurance Company, the Mutual Benefit Insurance Company, the Equitable Life Assurance Society, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, the Patriotic Service League, the Prudential Life Insurance Company, the Bank of United States, the Brooklyn Trust Company, and the Globe Indemnity Company.

From these, too, have been recruited bond salesmen and underwriters. All in all there are about 100,000 salesmen who are engaged in the work of making men give tangible proof of their patriotism.

The plan is one of local concentration—local committees, local headquarters, local meetings, and local schools. The work of the Metropolitan Canvass Committee is divided into the three boroughs it embraces, Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx. The boroughs are in turn divided into Liberty Loan districts, the boundaries of each district coinciding with the boundaries of the police precincts. Manhattan has thirty-three of these, Brooklyn thirty-one, and the Bronx ten.

Every district has its chief headquarters. When the area and the population warrant it there are one or two sub-headquarters. The precinct is mapped off into blocks, the blocks into houses, the houses into families, and the families into the number of people who can subscribe to the loan.

Every headquarters and sub-headquarters is manned by a Captain. Wherever possible these are trained bond salesmen. In practically every instance the premises in which this work is being done have been given to the committee free of charge.

The direct medium through which the individual is reached is the military census card made out last year by every person between the ages of 16 and 50. These were taken from the police precinct files and copies of them made by the pupils in the colleges and high schools in the city. These cards were then distributed by the precinct leaders to the sub-headquarters and there sorted out into blocks and houses. Each block has its lieutenant. These cards were given to him. The lieutenant in turn distributed them among the canvassers working under him, preferably men and women residing on that block. Thus equipped they set to work.

With definite people to see, the canvasser goes into the homes of the families allotted to him and has a face-to-face talk with the man or woman to whom he is trying to sell a bond. There is no backsliding here and no prevaricating. It's a question of have you or have you not subscribed to the first and second loans, are you or are you not going to subscribe to the third loan? They ask no favor, they give no favor; they put the facts on the table and want to know what you are going to do about them.

The issue is not made a personal one: It is not a matter of a man buying a bond because the man canvassing may be his friend, although that might expedite the buying; it is a question of straight patriotism. To the statement of inability to afford a sufficient outlay of money there is the answer of the weekly and monthly payment plan.

Through an arrangement made with the Liberty Loan Association of Banks and Trust Companies, there will be available about April 15 at numerous stations throughout the city a form of partial-payment-plan booklet. These will be issued to cover purchases of bonds in denominations of $50 and $100 on weekly installments. The initial payment here is $2 on a $50 bond and $4 on a $100 bond. This booklet will consist of coupons of one and two dollar denominations. Payments can be made at any bank in the United States or at any subsidiary located in the drug stores of the city. The latter is an entirely new feature in New York.

Where a man says that he intends to put in his subscription through his own bank, it is part of the work of the canvasser to agree with him on the wisdom of the plan and ask the man the name of this bank. This is noted down on the man's card and a record of the same kept. An interesting feature of the canvasser's work is the spotting of those people who object to the flotation of the bond through pro-German sentiments. The United States Attorney's office has sent in a request to the canvasser's committee to the effect that the canvassers report any cases where the words and actions of the individual to whom the buying of a bond is proposed shows indications of hostility to the Government.

"Whenever any one solicited by you, but not subscribing to the loan, so expresses himself or herself as to show a feeling of hostility to the United States or in favor of Germany in the war, the canvasser will at the time enter the word 'pro' on the card, and as soon as he has opportunity thereafter, enter also on the card the substance of what was said. By strictly observing this rule you will greatly help the United States in dealing with the enemy alien situation."

During the few days that the canvassing has been in effect the results have been more than gratifying. Volunteer workers in headquarters all over the city have gone out every night with twenty or twenty-five cards and have come back with subscriptions. In some instances, the subcommittees have chosen one man in every house to act as a lieutenant of his house. It comes down to a question of human vanity in these cases. Fearful of his neighbor finding out that he is not as rich as he is supposed to be and afraid of falling down in the estimation of his friends to whom his card may be shown, a man will in many cases make a sacrifice of which he would not otherwise be capable. That is exactly what the committee hopes to attain—to make a man subscribe to the greatest capacity.

Some of the finest results have so far been reported from the east side districts. Precinct 7 was at one time the greatest anti-militaristic district in the city. Today subscriptions amounting to $25,000 in fifty-dollar bonds have been handed in. A unique feature of this neighborhood lies in the fact that most of these are cash subscriptions, the men and women expressing a desire to purchase the bond immediately. The explanation of this lies in the fact that, having been swindled out of their savings by mushroom growth banks, these people have taken to keeping their money at home and are not only willing but anxious to put it into safekeeping with the Government.

Another point of interest is that Socialist leaders in the southern part of the city are leaving nothing undone to make the drive a popular one. Meetings are held in halls, club rooms, and street corners, and the man who last year may have preached the gospel of pacifism is today holding forth on the need of equipping the boys at the front. Pamphlets, books, posters, and speeches in all the languages spoken in the city are being widely and intensely discussed on the streets and on the doorsteps of these communities.

Another phase of the work by the Canvass Committee is the luncheon talks. In those parts of the city where a man's business is located near his home, the committee has arranged to hold a luncheon where a group of men on a block or on a number of blocks may foregather and discuss ways and means of sending on the drive. Speakers especially popular in special districts address the men and tell them the part that they can play in the flotation of the loan. The point is to reach the tradesman and through him the people with whom he comes in daily contact.

The schools of the city have also been organized to take part in the canvassing movement. On April 5, Arthur S. Somers, President of the Board of Education, sent out a notice to the 650 schools in the city, written in English, and telling the parents of the children the need and purpose of the Liberty Loan. To create a greater amount of enthusiasm the Metropolitan Canvass Committee is to award diplomas and certificates of merit to the schools doing the best work.

In line with the efficiency with which the house-to-house canvass by salesmen has been planned, the committee has worked out a competitive scheme by which every school is given a certain quota to fill. At the end of the drive there is to be a rally of members of schools reaching the 100 per cent. mark or more of their quota, one delegate being sent from schools reaching 100 per cent., two from 120 per cent., three from 130 per cent., and five from 150 per cent. To each of the ten schools ranking highest a Liberty Loan flag, with a white centre, red border and blue Liberty bell in the middle, will be awarded. Medals are to be presented to the pupils in each school bringing in the greatest number of subscriptions, aggregating the highest amount of money.

This phase of the work is not to be laughed at. Anybody who has ever been closely connected with school work will appreciate how great is the rivalry between classes in a school and between schools in a district.

The Rainbow Division, which is the name given to the Trades Committee group, though not working with the Metropolitan Committee, is organized along the same lines. It consists of eighty-one trades organized into a central committee of twelve, who are in direct communication with the heads of all the industries. They have set themselves out to raise the sum of $450,000,000, which is half of the amount allotted to the Second Federal Reserve District.

The man at the head of each industrial committee is in touch with every employer in his industry and knows just about how much can be expected from the men in each plant. Arrangements have been made with the employers to allow a certain time every day for the Liberty Loan work. During this time speakers like Arthur Guy Empey and Henry Chute address the men and tell them what their money will do for the boys at the front. After that the personal drive is again started, each man being talked to individually and asked where he stands.

According to Mr. Leach there is no loophole through which a man can escape.

"On first appearances," he said, "it might look like a matter of inefficiency having the committees and movements overlap as they do. But it isn't. It's the highest form of efficiency. We're going to get you, your neighbor, your grocer, your butcher, and your baker, and we're going to keep on hammering until you all fall in line.

"If the first man who comes to see you doesn't get a subscription from you, there will be a second man, who may strike you in a new mood and attack you from a different angle. If the second man doesn't get you, there will be a third, who will make you see some light on the subject. If, in order to get rid of him, you give him something in the way of a pledge, something that does not, however, come up to the limit that you might go, you will have the school children coming at you and asking you to swell the records of their school. You'll have them, anyway, until you give them something to boast of.

"If they don't get you, the man on the street corner, speaking your language and understanding your mind, will set you thinking and digging down deep. Your tradesmen will talk bonds to you, your neighbors will talk bonds to you, your club members will talk bonds to you, your papers will talk bonds, your favorite speaker will talk bonds until you have given the full measure of your resources. If ever there was a popular loan, this is to be one."

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

In the opinion written by Justice Holmes of the Supreme Court of the United States in Greer vs. United States the court passes on the question of presumption of defendant's good character, in which the court makes this rule:

"On a criminal trial, there is no presumption of defendant's good character, since a presumption upon a matter of fact, when not merely a disguise for some other principle, is based on common experience, showing the fact to be so generally true that courts may notice the truth, and it is not common experience that the character of most people indicted by a Grand Jury is good."

The defendant was tried and convicted for introducing whisky into that part of Oklahoma that was formerly Indian Territory, and was sentenced to prison. He alleged material error because the trial Justice refused to instruct the jury that he was presumed to be a person of good character and that the supposed presumption should be considered as evidence in favor of the accused. Justice Holmes says in his opinion:

"Obviously the character of the defendant was a matter of fact, which, if investigated, might turn out either way. It is not established as matter of law that all persons indicted are men of good character. If it were a fact regarded as necessarily material to the main issue it would be itself issuable, and the Government would be entitled to put in evidence whether the prisoner did so or not. As the Government cannot put in evidence except to answer evidence introduced by the defense, the natural inference is that the prisoner is allowed to try to prove a good character for what it may be worth, but that the choice whether to raise that issue rests with him. The rule that if he prefers not to go into the matter the Government cannot argue from it would be meaningless if there were a presumption in his favor that could be attacked. For failure to put on witnesses, instead of suggesting unfavorable comment, would only show the astuteness of the prisoner's counsel. The meaning must be that character is not an issue in the case unless the prisoner chooses to make it one; otherwise he would be foolish to open the door to contradiction by going into evidence when without it good character would be incontrovertibly presumed."

The District Court, Northern Division, Middle District of Alabama, holds that the writ of habeas corpus does not lie in favor of an alien enemy restrained of his liberty by the President under the provisions of a Presidential proclamation authorized by Congress to enforce the alienage act after declaration of war. The court so holds in a case where there was no dispute as to appliean for writ of habeas being an alien as described in the law and the proclamation, but his claim was that he was not about to violate any rule or regulation promulgated by the President in his proclamation, and impliedly he concedes that were he about so to do he would make himself liable to restraint. Neither does he claim that he was not given reasonable opportunity to show any facts that would take him out of the scope of the proclamation. He sought merely by his petition seemingly for the first time to raise an issue of fact as to whether he was a person liable to be restrained or interned.

The peculiar question whether one holding a policy insuring him against loss by reason of liability imposed by law upon him for destruction of or injury to property of others, arising from the use of his automobile, was entitled to recover not only the actual cost of repairs to a machine which was damaged by his car, but also the amount which he was obliged to pay for depreciation in the value of the automobile, caused by its having been in a collision, was before the court in the Minnesota case of Christison v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., L. R. A. 1917F, 612. It was decided that such a recovery might be had, although the policy contained a limitation clause that the insurer's liability "is limited to the actual intrinsic value of the property damaged or destroyed . . . which shall not be greater than the actual cost of the repairs or replacement thereof." This seems to be the first case which has considered the question.

The release by a baseball club of the services of a ballplayer under contract with it, to another club, in consideration of a certain sum of money, is held not illegal as being opposed to public policy, nor as amounting to a contract for involuntary servitude of the player, in the Georgia case of Augusta Baseball Asso. v. Thomasville Baseball Club, L.R.A. 1917F, 841.

SPRING STYLES ARE HERE AHEAD OF SPRING

FOR weeks we have been hearing what the Spring styles were to be, and now for the first time we are really being privileged to see what the Spring styles really are. Now and again when the sun decides to keep shining through the day and warm the busy streets, there appear the most fascinating of new Spring clothes. At tea here and there one sees the newest in Spring wraps and furs budding forth, and these are the days that prove the efficacy of Summer furs. Too warm it is for Winter things all filled with wool and interlined, but a light wrap of fur is more to be desired than the lightness of a really light Spring wrap. The little fur jackets are decidedly mid-Victorian in their lines. They fold about the shoulders in a decidedly pinched and cramped manner, giving to those who wear them somewhat of the sloping shoulder look of our grandmothers. Worn with tiny turbans, close fitting and high standing, they present an appearance of ultra-smartness—the very lastest bit in things for the street and for afternoon affairs.

Flowered hats come in for more than their quota of popular attention; and they are not the flowered hats of our previous experiences, but are made up of tiny little conventionalized daisies in flat colors of velvet. For instance, the shade may be bright cerise, (and it nearly always is this shade on the younger faces,) when every little flower is made identically the same without a variation in the tone of the color. They have little specks of yellow centres, and the flowers are laid on in a very regular fashion one after the other all over the hat. Many times these hats have no brims at all, being laid close to the hair in turban fashion. Then again they are provided with little tip-tilted brims, turning up or turning down, and always decidedly chic in the result that they achieve.

Capes there are in great abundance—almost too great abundance—though some of them are so wonderfully smart as to allow of no inch of criticism. It is, after all, a great relief to be able to get away from the all-pervading coat of several seasons past. The coats had evolved to a state where there seemed to be no distinction between them. They were all alike, and there were so many millions of them dotting the landscape that one wondered if the uniform for women had crept upon us unawares. Perhaps the cape will serve its purpose in breaking up the strangle-hold of the long coat.

Serge frocks new and original in their designs keep bursting upon our view. There is every variety conceivable for this sort of frock, and there is something strange about them that seems to keep them from ever growing monotonous. The newest trick is to combine serge with one of the new printed foulards, in which idea there is every cause for enthusiasm. The patterns in the foulards are astonishingly beautiful, and they show to their very best advantage when given a foil of some material of plain color and inconspicuous weave. Foulards are used, too, for lining the Summer capes of serge, making a wrap that is most effective.

At a tea by musicians for musicians given during the last week there were seen some quite lovely gowns of the Spring vintage. One particularly among them had every hall mark of having just lately been landed from the last boat from Paris. It was of one simple piece of heavy black satin, making a dress that was straight up and down in all of its lines. Then, to give it an air of quiet distinction, it was embroidered from top to toe in old gold and shades of quite dark blue silk. The pattern of the embroidery was Chinese in feeling, though with no particular look of the Orient about it. The sleeves were long and tightly fitted, and the belt was the mere shadow of a girdle tied loosely about a low waist line. The hat that was worn with this gown had a narrow, turban brim of black Lisere straw and a high draped velvet crown in a peculiar shade of old gold velvet.

Another afternoon gown seen on this same occasion was made of heavy black satin left simple and unadorned as far as any sort of embroidery was concerned. It had a narrow little collar of cream-colored lace and embroidery laid across the back in a straight and uncompromising line. Then at a normal waistline there was wrapped about it a wide girdle of French blue djersadore. This was tied in a loose, sloppy bow at one side, and the ends had big rolled cord tassels to match. That was all there was to the gown, and the hat was as simple as the rest of the combination, being just one big drooping line of black milan with a flat piece of black ribbon at one side.

Sloppy clothes, by the way, when they are done just right, are an achievement of this season. They look to the casual observer as though there was nothing to them at all. And there really is nothing to them except a sureness of touch and workmanship that marks them unmistakably for creations of master artists. They hang in uninterrupted lines from the shoulders, and the cut of them is nothing at all except two straight seams and a hole left for the head to come through. Still, they cannot possibly be done casually, and only those who are experienced beyond the shadow of a doubt can make them look like anything at all when they are finished. Big casual-looking stitches of wool are used to hold them together; their sleeves are apt to have no fitted cuffs of any sort, and their necklines are left devoid of a studied finish. Still, they stand as masterpieces of the dressmaker's art—the most beautiful things that have been done in years.

One frock of this general character was made of a combination of dark blue and yellow jersey. On the blue were yellow stitches and vice versa, while the upper part of the dress was blue and the lower or skirt portion yellow. It was, as it stood, a thing much to be desired, and yet it had not one fancy line or stitch about its entire being.

The last plays of the season are opening now, and, while the gowns seen at the first performances are not as elaborate as they once were, they are none the less worthy of notice, as well as imitation. When has an evening gown been so perfect a thing as regards its general line and form? And they seem to grow more lovely, if more simple, as time goes on. Education in this respect has been doing wonders, and more and more we see gowns with no bit of trimming about them. There is this one noticeable thing about the new gowns for dinner and theatre wear—they have much of gold and silver brocade used in their making. It is not always left to shine in its unadulterated glitter, for sometimes it is veiled all over its sparkling surface by a layer of tulle or a wisp of chiffon, all of which adds charm to the general effect.

One Way of Freshening a Gown of Plain Foundation.

The new sleeves, too, are lovely things. They droop and fall in billows and are made of yards and yards of quite transparent material. On one gown seen recently in public the sleeves were cut perfectly square and hung straight down to the hem of the gown. The sleeves were of dark blue tulle joined with gilt insertion, and the gown was of dark blue satin.

Many of the evening gowns appear to start at a point under the shoulder blades and extend in a straight line all around the figure. Of course there is a mere layer of malines to slip over the shoulders to hold the gown in place, but when this is flesh colored, and the gown is of some deep tone of satin or velvet, the shoulder holding has a way of disappearing into thin air.

Perhaps it is the new Spring suits that are foremost in every woman's mind just now. At any rate they are worthy of so being. In spite of all the restrictions that have been imposed upon them by the war requirements and the shortage of wool, they have bloomed forth in a profusion of new styles quite unbelievable. Take, for example, the one shown in the illustration on this page. It is made of an unusual shade of putty-colored gabardine, and the smart little jacket has steel buttons with tarnish braid to give it a trimming with a suggestion of the military about it. The skirt is peculiar, in that it is accordion pleated, giving the required straight line and the comfortable full feeling at one and the same time. Its patent leather belt is another interesting touch.

The suits that have been sent over from Paris by Lanvin and Bernard are the most arresting of all when it comes to the last detail of simplicity thoughtfully worked out. One can hardly find an angle by which to describe them, they are so really unpretentious. Yet there is about them a charm that is hard to imitate, and they supersede all when it comes to the subject of youthfulness. The materials are mostly serge, gabardine, light wool duvetyns, with always silk and satin once to break the sordid monotony.

There is something about the new blouses, too, that is peculiarly characteristic of the times. There is nothing to them, absolutely. Yet there they stand in all their glory as the most beautiful blouses that have ever been created. Can it be the ultra-daintiness of their materials or the charm of the transparent, singing colors? Who knows? The point is that they are distinctly charming.

There are new ones made of dotted mull—oh, no; not the thing we have been accustomed to see for generations, but a new daintiness of pink pin dots on a white background or of white dots on a mauve surface. On one of these—white dotted with blue—is a little round collar, edged with two narrow ruffles, each edged with a suggestion of Valenciennes lace. There is a black ribbon necktie, with long and floating ends, and little, tight, ruffled cuffs.

Another blouse of figured swiss—white on a biscuit-colored ground—buttons down the back and is cut with a round neck shirred in three lines. In the finish of the neckline lies its different quality, for there it is shirred over narrow delft blue baby ribbon, drawn to fit, and tied in a careless bow at the back. The extremely full sleeves are finished in much the same fashion, the bows being tied at the outer edges of the cuffs.

Since economy is not only the rage, but the common necessity of the day, a dress that can serve more than one purpose has unique standing in the present affairs of the feminine world. The simplest form of this idea is to have a gown, say of serge or of satin, made on entirely conservative lines, with the provision of changing collars and cuffs to vestees and undersleeves, or with the possibility of varying either of these sets of ornamentation. There are so many original things to be done in this direction. There is the use of organdy in pastel shades. It has infinite possibilities. Colored chiffons are done this season in this connection, and so on through all the list of collar and waistcoat materials.

There are places where one can buy one gown and one coat, including slip-overs and other accessories that will fill every purpose during the day from early morning until late at night. There is the underslip to start with, and then there are tunics and chiffon slipovers and evening draperies to be worn over the main foundation. Even the coat will serve every purpose known to woman by being a velvet one for daytime service, and, turned wrong side out, a satin one for evening duties. There is everything to recommend a plan of this sort in the present state of affairs. Certainly it removes a large load from one's shoulders in the way of planning various gowns for various occasions. Here you have it all in one and never a stray thought is spent in other and somewhat fruitless directions.

NEW YORK JUST AFTER THE REVOLUTION

AN interesting picture of the reconstructor of New York during the years immediately following the Revolution is presented in the volumes of the Minutes of the Common Council from 1784 to 1831, now being printed by the City.

These official minutes, embracing some of the most important years and events in the growth of New York and contained in sixty-eight manuscript volumes, have hitherto been practically unavailable for historical research. They are the last series of extant records of New York City to be published. The minutes of the Dutch period, from 1653 to 1674, were printed in seven volumes twenty years ago and a few years later the minutes of the English period, from 1675 to 1776, were published in eight volumes. There are no records during the British occupancy of the city from 1776 to 1783.

The Common Council minutes have been carefully edited by a committee appointed by Mayor Mitchel in 1916. They will be printed in twenty volumes on the best rag paper for permanent preservation, and the first ten volumes will be ready for subscribers within a few weeks. They cover a period of about forty-seven years, the first entry being Feb. 10, 1784, and the last entry, May 9, 1831. During that time the population increased from 23,000 to 202,000.

The first meeting recorded in the minutes reveals the fact that the City Hall, then at the head of Broad Street, now occupied by the Sub-Treasury building, was undergoing repairs for the first United States Congress, which met there a few months later. James Duane, in whose honor Duane Street is named, was Mayor, and his official board consisted of seven Aldermen and seven assistant Aldermen. The meeting was held "at the house of John Simmons, inn keeper," the site of which has been fixed at the northwest corner of Nassau and Wall Streets. It was not the first meeting of the Common Council, which was organized in December, 1783, but the earlier minutes have apparently been lost. The Mayor was then appointed by the Governor, a custom that remained until 1834, when the city charter was amended by the Legislature, and Cornelius W. Lawrence was the first Mayor elected by the people. The Mayor was appointed annually, being inducted, as the minutes of Oct. 14, 1785, show, when James Duane began his second term, "by ringing three bells and a proclamation for silence." He then took the oath of office, as did the other members of the Common Council.

Among the members of the first Aldermanic Board were Daniel Phoenix, for many years the City Chamberlain; Thomas Randall, father of Robert Richard Randall, who bequeathed his property for the Sailors' Snug Harbor; John Broome, one of the leading merchants and philanthropists; John de Peyster, and Abraham Van Gelder. Richard Varick was inducted as Recorder on Feb. 24, 1784, and the first meeting in the City Hall was on March 25. Early in 1785 Congress began its sessions there, and the minutes contain the resolutions offering the building.

The meeting of Sept. 11, 1784, ordered that five respectful addresses be presented, with the freedom of the city, in gold boxes to Washington, Lafayette, Baron Steuben, Governor George Clinton, and John Jay. The addresses, with the replies of the recipients, appear in subsequent minutes. The cost of the gold boxes ranged from $72 to $114.60.

In 1789 there is a record of another honor paid to Washington under date of July 19, when it was resolved "that the President of the United States be requested to permit Mr. Trumbull to take his portrait, to be placed in the City Hall as a monument of the respect which the inhabitants of this city bear towards him."

The artist was Colonel John Trumbull, the Revolutionary soldier. His portrait of Washington is now in the City Hall, as well as his painting of Governor George Clinton, ordered a few days later. The minutes show that Mr. Trumbull was paid by the city £186 13s. 4d. for each portrait. As the pound at that time was valued at $2.50, the artist received about $465 for each painting.

The City Hall was then known as Federal Hall, and the city spent over £13,000 in repairs to prepare it for the official home of the President and Congress. Major L'Enfant, the French engineer who came to America with Lafayette and who afterward drew the plan for the new City of Washington, planned the alterations for the City Hall. A forgotten tribute of the city in recognition of his work is revealed in the minutes of Oct. 12, 1789, where, after reciting that he "has displayed a highly distinguished degree of skill and taste in architecture," the freedom of the city was extended to him with a grant of ten acres of corporation land. This ten-acre plot was selected in the east side just north of Fifty-seventh Street, east of Third Avenue, extending to the river, and its boundaries are accurately described. Major L'Enfant declined to accept this munificent offer and his reply is recorded in the minutes of April 14, 1790.

The records show that the city was in a deplorable financial condition and large sums of money had to be borrowed from private individuals for municipal expenses. An illustration of this condition is presented in the meeting of March 9, 1785, when a letter was read from John Jay asking the board to pay the interest on a bond of £200. The Common Council orders that Mr. Jay be informed that "this corporation will use its utmost efforts to satisfy all creditors, but that from the ravages of the war it is out of their power to make immediate payment to Mr. Jay as he requests."

A little later a letter from Nicholas Ray of London was received offering to buy all the iron needed for city construction work if a common fund could be raised for payment. A letter of thanks was ordered, but "in consequence of the heavy debt," it could not be accepted.

In April, 1785, Richard Varian was appointed as public pound keeper at "Bull's Head Tavern in the out ward" with an allowance of two shillings for each head of horses or cattle. The location of the pound was on the Bowery just above Bayard Street. A little later the corporation dispensed with the services of a public whipper, but it was evidently premature, for future minutes contain records of regular payments to "Joseph Sheivery, public whipper."

An interesting indication of the effort to abate some of the nuisances of the city appeared at the meeting on Sept. 20, 1786, when it was recorded that "the going at large of hogs, shoats, and pigs on the streets and highways of this city is attended with many inconveniences to the citizens at large and with great injury to individuals." It was ordered that after Jan. 1 hogs should be barred from the streets on penalty of forfeiting the animals. It was evidently a drastic rule for the time, for it was only carried by a vote of 6 to 5. The law, however, was not rigidly enforced until many years later.

Colonel Richard Varick, who succeeded James Duane in October, 1789, was the first Mayor to receive a fixed salary. How this method of compensating the head of the municipality was brought about appears in the minutes for the month of December of that year. Hitherto the Mayor depended for his remuneration on the fees from the public markets and tavern licenses, with a few other perquisites, including the small charge for conferring the rights of a freeman upon a resident. The improved business conditions had increased the market and other license fees to such an extent that in the last years of Mr. Duane's Mayoralty he was only allowed to retain one-half of the market fees, and he had to share the payments of the tavern keepers with the corporation. His salary, as a committee reported, ranged from $1,500 to $2,000 a year. The former sum was considered sufficient for the Mayor, and Colonel Varick accepted the salary of $1,500, beginning Jan. 1, 1785.

Spurious copper coins sent in from neighboring States, by which many merchants had been defrauded, led the city fathers to authorize an issue of small paper currency in 1789, the first issue being of $1,000, in one, two, and three penny bills. This was the only way in which small currency could be provided. It was taken up so rapidly that in less than three months an extra issue was ordered.

The name of Isaac Sears, one of the boldest leaders of the Liberty Boys in the Stamp act troubles prior to the Revolution, occurs several times in the minutes in demanding payment from the city for a lot in the present City Hall Park just below Chambers Street which he claimed had been unjustly appropriated by the corporation. The difficulty was adjusted in June, 1785, when he showed proof of purchase and agreed to accept £80 with interest in satisfaction of his claim.

One of the most valuable features of the minutes are the descriptions of corporation land sales, the granting of realty rights, the remittance of rents during the occupancy of the city by the British and other references having an important bearing in real estate titles.

The Common Council minutes are being published in a limited edition of 350 sets. The committee in direct charge of the work includes Victor Hugo Paltsits, former State Historian, Chairman; Dr. C. C. Williamson, Secretary, and Dr. A. Everett Peterson, editor.

The minutes from 1831 to the present time have been published annually with the exception of one year, 1871.

IN BEHALF OF THE DOG

IN an article written for The Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer on the practicability of using dogs as guardians of sheep, Dr. Kemp P. Battle, President Emeritus of the University of North Carolina, recalls Charles Darwin's tribute to the intelligence and reliability of shepherd dogs. Says Dr. Battle:

"Here we have from a most reliable observer of facts the inexpensive method adopted by South American herders for the protection of sheep. There would be little trouble in segregating a young collie from other dogs and children and confining him to the companionship of sheep. The plan is not an experiment; it is a widely adopted successful practice. And it has the advantage of calling a halt on the war on dogs, from whom our people will never willingly consent to be parted.

"I am no dog fancier. Since my noble St. Bernard, Romeo, died at the age of 18 years, I have not taken to my heart and home any canine. I, however, realise the usefulness of this friend of mankind. Although there are worthless dogs, as there are worthless men, there are many of them loving and loved friends to their owners, many protectors of lonely country families, many useful in providing good food, and exterminating vermin. In my long life I have seen only two mad dogs, and they were promptly slaughtered. Should the dangers of one lead to the destruction of ninety-nine? I am satisfied that a war against them would lead to widespread ill-humor among our people."

SOCIAL DIVERSIONS OF MID-APRIL

Tableaux at Ritz-Carlton for Red Cross—Amateur Comedy Club to Give Benefit Performance—Impromptu War Weddings at Home and Abroad—Entertainment in Aid of Le Cercle Rochambeau

APRIL is having its share of social diversions, with those of a patriotic nature in the majority.

The closing of the opera season this week practically ends the formal season, although activities will continue, and the gap between Spring and Summer or town and country will be bridged with war-relief work and service in the Liberty Loan campaign.

The cold, freakish weather has given an impetus to all indoor affairs. Few out-of-door events are scheduled for this month. Next week will occur the annual Spring Horse Show in Durland's Riding Academy, the proceeds to go to the American Red Star Animal Relief. The social as well as the sporting success of the show is a foregone conclusion.

Word comes from abroad of a new American hospital recently opened in London, which has been presented and equipped and will be maintained by Mr. and Mrs. A. Chester Beatty of New York.

The medical and nursing staffs are entirely American, and the wards bear the names of famous Americans. The Duchess of Marlborough, the Duchess of Manchester, the Duchess of Roxburghe, Mrs. Waldorf Astor, Lord and Lady Granard, the Hon. and Mrs. Frederick Guest, Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Laughlin, Lady Herbert, and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid were among those who accepted invitations to the opening.

On Tuesday evening, at the Ritz-Carlton, an entertainment and dance will be given for the Naval Auxiliary of the Red Cross 205. Tableaux depicting the Allies in individual poses, staged by Ben Ali Haggin, will be shown.

The Amateur Comedy Club, which was organized in 1884, has emerged from its retirement to give public performances for war relief. On Wednesday the club is to present a benefit program at the Garden Theatre under the auspices of the Junior War Relief Society, organized four years ago, which has an average attendance of over 500 workers on each Tuesday morning, in the large ballroom at Sherry's. It makes surgical supplies and woolen articles.

Those in the club that will take part in a two-act comedy, entitled "Paint and Personality," and "The Door," a one-act play, will be Miss Eva McAdoo, Miss Grace Henry, Mrs. Harry M. Curtiss, Mrs. D. M. Martin, also E. F. Coward, Albert Sterner, Henry C. Smith, Joseph Lamb, Howard Greeley, Henry C. Quimby, and Lloyd Aspinwall.

Mrs. Walter Eyre Lambert of 112 East Thirty-fifth Street is receiving applications for tickets. Nearly all of the tickets for the top balcony have been purchased, and are to be distributed to sailors and soldiers through the Navy Club and the canteens.

For the war relief work of Le Cercle Rochambeau, of which Mrs. John R. MacArthur is President, two playlets and tableaux vivants will be presented at the Hotel Plaza on Saturday evening, to be followed by dancing.

Mlle. Yvonne Garrick and Miss Annie Hughes of London are to appear in the playlets, and Amparita Farra, soprano, and Sascha Jacobson, violinist, will be heard in selections. Many prominent people are to take part in the tableaux.

SURE enough, the second week of the post-Lenten season was dotted with weddings, and numerous interesting engagements were announced. This week holds out few promises in the way of nuptials, so far announced; but it will probably have its quota. Weddings, these tense war days, simply happen. Arrangements are often made now over night.

These impromptu and informal nuptials have a war flavor that is unique. Some one has said that the girl who becomes engaged to a soldier and then allows him to go "over there" without marrying him is a slacker. In this respect it may be safely asserted that there are no slackers in society.

Yesterday grew in importance as a wedding day as the week progressed, the brides seemingly defying the superstitious 13, although Friday, as usual, was skipped. Miss Phyllis W. Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Q. Brown, and Miss Katherine C. Culver, the daughter of Mrs. Charles P. Kling, and granddaughter of former Senator William A. Clark, were among the brides.

The fourth and last Saturday in April is forging to the front as a popular day with the brides-elect. Plans have been completed for several of the weddings announced for that day.

Miss Florence Gilbert, who is to be married on April 27 to Sergeant Russell Evans Tucker, Jr., O. R. C., will have her sister, Miss Betty W. Gilbert, as her only attendant. Lieutenant Harry Tucker is to be his brother's best man. The wedding is to be a quiet affair, at the home of Mrs. Cyril Dugmore, 330 Park Avenue, the bride's mother.

Miss Elizabeth Thompson, who is to wed John R. Drexel, Jr., on that day, will have no attendants. Willard Spencer, Jr., a cousin of Mr. Drexel, is to be his best man. The marriage will be celebrated at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. De Forest Grant, 70 East Fifty-fourth Street.

Miss Katherine G. Chapin, daughter of Mrs. Lindley H. Chapin, who is to marry Francis Beverly Biddle of Philadelphia in the Church of the Heavenly Rest on the afternoon of April 27, has chosen her sister, Miss Cornelia Chapin, as her maid of honor. Mrs. John Chapin, Mrs. Malcolm E. Peabody of Boston, and the Misses Eleanora Kissel and Katharine Greene are to be the other attendants.

Moncure Biddle will be his brother's best man. The ushers will include Lieutenant Alexander Biddle, U. S. R., a cousin of the bridegroom, and Sydney G. Biddle, another brother; John Searle and Henry H. Wilder of Boston, William G. Roelker of Providence, R. I.; Henry C. Brengle of Philadelphia, and Harold Bell.

On Wednesday, April 24, Miss Henrietta Porter, a sister of Mrs. Samuel H. Valentine of 5 East Sixty-seventh Street, is to become the bride of Arthur Morton Lippincott, son of the late Edward Lippincott of Philadelphia. Their engagement has just been announced. Miss Porter, who is the daughter of the late A. S. Porter of Hartford, Conn., has made her home with Mrs. Valentine for several years.

Another war wedding abroad has been added to the growing list of young society women and men from New York who have married in France while in service and war relief work. On April 6 Mrs. Jewett Minturn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian W. Robbins of this city, was married in Paris to Lieut. Col. Van Rensselaer C. King, U. S. R., announcement of which came by cable. Colonel King just recently announced the engagement of his sister, Miss Jeanne King, to Lieutenant Charles de Rham, Jr., U. S. N. A. Mrs. King has been engaged in France for some months in canteen work under the supervision of the Y. M. C. A.

Two days after the announcement of their engagement, Miss Frederika Peterson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Peterson of 535 Park Avenue, and Lieutenant Theodore Carrington Jessup of the 305th Infantry, stationed at Camp Upton, were married in the Brick Presbyterian Church. The wedding on Tuesday was hastened owing to the exigencies of war. The bridal pair stood under an immense United States flag during the ceremony.

Miss Elizabeth Leary, daughter of Mrs. John Leary of the Hotel Buckingham, was married to Major James T. Loree on Monday at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Major Loree is serving on the Headquarters Staff, 27th Division, at Camp Wadsworth. A few days preceding the wedding, Major Loree's birthday was celebrated at the Hotel Chatham by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leonor F. Loree, by a dinner. Mr. Loree, Sr., is President of the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, and Chairman of the Eastern Division of the Railroad War Board.

THERE has been a bumper crop of Spring engagements.

Miss Maud Rives Borland's engagement to Justice Franklin Chase Hoyt, Presiding Justice of the Children's Court of this city, has been announced by her brother, Lieutenant John Borland, U. S. N., of Newport. Miss Borland lives at the Colony Club, and has a country place at New Hamburg, N. Y. She has been prominently identified with philanthropic work, also war relief service as a member of the National League for Women's Service. Her mother was a sister of the late George L. Rives. Justice Hoyt has had an active public career since 1902, and when appointed by Mayor McClellan as Judge of the Court of Special Sessions he was the youngest Judge on the bench.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Blair Mitchell of this city and Bernardsville, N. J., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lucy Virginia Mitchell, to James J. Higginson of New York, who is about to sail for France on Red Cross work.

Mrs. John Edwin Toulmin of Boston has told of the betrothal of her elder daughter, Miss Evelyn R. Toulmin, to Captain James C. Mackenzie, Jr., of this city, son of Dr. and Mrs. James C. Mackenzie. Before receiving his commission, Captain Mackenzie was an architect of this city, and is now stationed with the 307th Regiment of Field Artillery at Camp Dix.

Announcement has been made by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene de Sabla of 22 East Sixty-fourth Street and San Mateo, Cal., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Leontine de Sabla, to Dr. William Gordon Lyle of this city, director of the Harriman medical research work in connection with Roosevelt Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph D. Paine of Durham, N. H., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Barbara Paine, to Lieutenant Adrian O. Morse of Stamford, Conn., a Yale man, class of '18, who is stationed at Camp Devens. Miss Paine is a cousin of the Secretary of State, Robert Lansing. Her brother, Lansing M. Paine, won the Croix de Guerre with two citations while serving with the American Field Ambulance in France. Her father, Ralph D. Paine, the author, recently returned from five months' service with the allied naval forces in the war zone, during which he was honored by the gift of a medal inscribed "Homage of the City of Dunkirk to an American Friend of France."

Miss Ruth M. Sanford, niece of Mr. and Mrs. Chase E. Williams of Nyack, N. Y., is to marry Durant Bowers of this city, son of Mrs. John A. Weekes of 46 West Forty-seventh Street. Their engagement was announced last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Deventer Black of Irvington-on-Hudson have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Dorothy Black, to Randolph Martin Elsworth, U. S. N. R. F., son of Mrs. Henry Anthon Bostwick, also of Irvington, and the late Randolph M. Elsworth.

United States Senator and Mrs. William Musgrave Calder of Brooklyn and Washington, D. C., announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elsie Frances Calder, to Lieutenant Robert Corwin Lee, U. S. N., of Blackfoot, Idaho, at a luncheon held last week in Brooklyn, where Miss Calder has been visiting. Since the outbreak of the war, Miss Calder has distinguished herself in supplying comforts to the army and navy, and to the boys on the United States ship New York; for which she was sponsor. Lieutenant Lee graduated in 1910 from the naval academy at Annapolis.

Dr. and Mrs. Phineas Hillhouse Adams of 55 East Sixty-first Street are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Adams was formerly Miss Marguerite L. W. Janvrin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Janvrin of New York.

A daughter was born last week to Lieutenant and Mrs. S. Bryce Wing at their home, 58 Central Park West. Mrs. Wing, before her marriage, was Miss Marie Taller. Lieutenant Wing is stationed at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., and has been home on a short furlough.

IT has been announced that the exhibition of the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors, at 6 West Fifty-seventh Street, will be open Sunday afternoons during April, from 2 till 6 o'clock.

Many prominent in the social world attended the private view last Tuesday of the paintings by Mrs. Newell W. Tilton, held at 390 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Tilton is one of several women of society whose abilities as painters or sculptors have prompted them to enter the professional field. She is the daughter of Poultney Bigelow and granddaughter of the late John Bigelow.

Among those who attended were Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, Mrs. Ernesto V. Fabbri, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr.; Mrs. Adam G. Norrie, Miss Maria de Barril, and Mrs. Grenville Kane.

Mrs. Edson Bradley is to give a luncheon at her house in Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, for Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of Governor Whitman, who is visiting at the nation's capital.

All of the receipts of the concert and dance, held last night at the Waldorf-Astoria, will go to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, of which Cleveland H. Dodge is Treasurer. The combined musical clubs of Yale, Princeton, and Harvard arranged an interesting program of college and patriotic numbers. Mme. Frances Alda and Miss Anna Fitziu lent their aid toward the success of the program.

Mrs. Waldo Richards is to give readings from the poets on Wednesday, at the home of Mrs. J. Horace Harding, 955 Fifth Avenue, and on the following Wednesday at the house of Mrs. John Henry Hammond, 9 East Ninety-first Street. The proceeds will be shared with the Red Cross Auxiliary of the Art War Relief of 661 Fifth Avenue.

B. Ogden Chisolm, who has been making an exhaustive study of prisons, is to give a talk this evening at the Church of the Holy Communion, Sixth Avenue and Twentieth Street. Mr. Chisolm has visited most of the large prisons throughout the country, and is a member of the Executive Committee of the New York Prison Association.

The prizes at the benefit bridge held yesterday at the Plaza by the Barnard Club unit of the Duryea War Relief wear autographed books. William Dean Howells autographed one of his books as follows: "Our hearts are with the hands that fight for liberty and rebuild the broken homes of those who have suffered from despotism." Dr. Henry van Dyke, in one of his books, wrote: "Inscribed with sincere wishes for the success of every one who helps the good cause of justice, liberty, and humanity now against Prussian barbarism."

Another card party is to be held at the Plaza tomorrow for the benefit of the West End Exchange and Industrial Union for self-supporting women.

Because of the appeals that have come by cable telling of the thousands of new little orphans in France, the New York Committee of the Fatherless Children of France, which is headed by Miss Luisita Leland, has secured André Tardieu, the French High Commissioner to the United States, to speak on Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, 4 West Fifty-eighth Street. M. Tardieu is coming on from Washington especially for this purpose. On the program with him will be Miss Eleanor Fell, delegate of the Paris Committee, who will tell of the work in France. This is the first assembly of the Fatherless Children of France this year.

French Day and the second gala Tuesday are two fixtures planned in behalf of the Sandoz Mission, which is representing in this country at the salon of modern French paintings in the former Vanderbilt house, 677 Fifth Avenue, the French invalided soldiers.

French Day is announced for next Saturday. The plans made for the program of that afternoon include Mme. Genevieve Vix of the Chicago Opera Company, who will sing the "Marseillaise," and Miss Andrée Bartlette, who will recite.

Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar and Mrs. Robert Bacon will preside over both French Day and the second of the salon's gala Tuesdays. For this Tuesday, Miss Marguerite Namara will sing, and Mischa Levitsky will play. Mrs. Otto Kahn, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies will be the afternoon's hostesses.

The final meeting in the present drive for 100,000 members of the Needlework Guild of America, New York City Branch, will be held tomorrow afternoon, in the war relief workrooms, 160 Fifth Avenue. Though the drive ends tomorrow, and immediate returns may not show more than half the number set out for in the fifteen day drive, letters of inquiry have been pouring into headquarters all week, and there is not a particle of doubt that the goal will be reached by the annual distribution of garments date early in November. The two new garments which constitute membership in the Guild, it must be remembered, are not turned in until just before distribution.

A most generous response has been made to the announcement of the dramatic war play, "The Spirit of Poland," to be produced at the Cort Theatre, on Thursday afternoon. Among the many new patronesses are Mrs. Kingsbury Curtis, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. John Greenough, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Richard March Hoe, Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, Mrs. Frank B. Rowell, Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mrs. George Montgomery Tuttle, Mrs. Frank Van Beuren, and Mrs. Howard van Sinderen.

It may be remembered that the proceeds will be sent to Miss Alma Tadema in London for the destitute children of Poland in the orphanages in England, Holland, and Switzerland.

HOW TO TELL VISITING OFFICERS

COLONEL DION WILLIAMS, U. S. M. C., the representative of the Marine Corps on the General Board of the Navy, until recently commanding the American Legation Guard in Peking, and who commanded the Fleet Marines in the voyage of the Atlantic Fleet around the world, is the author of a book which Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of War Baker say should be of much interest to Americans at this time.

The book, which is entitled "Army and Navy Uniforms and Insignia," published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company of New York, is said to be the most complete of its kind ever written. In this article, with the consent of Colonel Williams, information taken from the book shows the civilian how at a glance he can tell the rank of British and French officers of the army and navy, of whom there are now hundreds in this country.

In that part of Colonel Williams's book which tells the story of foreign uniforms the British service is first described. Colonel Williams says:

> In general the uniforms of the British Navy correspond quite closely to those of the United States Navy in composition and design and are worn upon similar occasions * * * The full dress is very nearly the same in style and design to the special full dress of the United States naval officer and the frock coat dress and blue and white mess dress the same as the corresponding United States naval uniforms. The blue undress uniform of the British officer differs from the service dress of the United States officer in that the coat worn with it is a square cut double breasted sack coat with turn down collar and rolling lapels with two rows of four buttons each down the front. The white undress of the British is the same as white service dress of the American officer.

The system of sleeve stripes and shoulder straps which indicate the rank of a naval officer is practically the same in the American and British services, the principal difference being a "curl" above the top stripe in the British in place of the "star" which designates the United States service.

The branch of the service to which a British naval officer belongs is indicated on the shoulder straps and the sleeves as follows:

> Officers of the Line—By the circle or "curl" on the upper stripe of gold lace braid.
> Engineer Officers—By the circle or "curl" as above with the addition of stripes of purple cloth between the gold stripes.
> Medical Officers—The circle or "curl" is omitted and there are stripes of scarlet cloth between the gold stripes.
> Accountant or Pay Officers—The circle or "curl" is omitted and there are stripes of white cloth between the gold stripes.
> Naval Instructors—The circle or "curl" is omitted and there are stripes of light blue cloth between the gold stripes.

With the exception that there is more bell to the crown of the caps worn by British officers the caps in the two services are identical. The cocked hats of the British and American are the same.

The enlisted men of the British Navy wear uniforms very similar in general design to those worn in the United States Navy, with minor differences in the dimensions and cut of the various garments.

This is a war in which the dress uniform plays no part, it no longer being worn in any of the services; the British officer in America is always seen in his field dress. Colonel Williams says:

> "The rank of an officer in service uniform is indicated by metal insignia of rank worn upon the shoulder straps and also, (for officers below the rank of Brigadier General) by stripes of worsted braid around the sleeves just above the lower edge and by worsted insignia of rank worn on a three-pointed strap which crosses the sleeve stripes on the cuffs. These insignia are as follows for the various grades of rank:
> Field Marshal—Two crossed batons in red surrounded by a wreath of gold laurel leaves and surmounted by a British crown in gold and red.
> General—A baton and sword crossed with a diamond-shaped device above it and a crown above the diamond, all in gold.
> Major General—A baton and sword crossed with the diamond above, all in gold.
> Brigadier General—The same, omitting the diamond.
> Major—A crown.
> Captain—Three diamonds in a vertical line.
> Lieutenant—Two diamonds in a vertical line.
> Second Lieutenant—One diamond.

The insignia which indicate the rank of the officer of the French Army are as follows:

> Marshal of France—Seven stars on each cuff, arranged in three vertical rows, the centre row having three stars and the outer rows having two stars each.
> General of Division—Three stars on each cuff arranged in a triangle with the point up.
> General of Brigade—Two stars placed on each cuff horizontally.
> Colonel—Five gold stripes, or galons, on each cuff.
> Lieutenant Colonel—The same as for Colonel, except that the second and fourth stripes are of silver.
> Major—Four gold stripes.
> Captain—Three gold stripes.
> Lieutenant—Two gold stripes.
> Second Lieutenant—One gold stripe.

A feature of the French Army uniforms are the service chevrons, for both officers and enlisted men, which are worn on the right sleeve between the elbow and shoulder. A single stripe indicates one year at the front in the present war, there being an additional stripe added for each additional six months at the front. The French chevron is of dull gold.

The enlisted men of the French Army have service uniforms of the same color as those for officers. The uniform consists of a single breasted sack coat, with standing collar and a patch pocket with buttoned flap on each side below the waist, cut to fit easily; breeches cut full above and close-fitting below the knees; wrap puttees of cloth of the same color as the coat and breeches; tan leather shoes; and a plain cap of the kepi pattern with sloping visor.

The rank of noncommissioned officers is indicated by short stripes of cloth worn diagonally across the outer side of the coat sleeves between the elbow and the lower edge, as follows:

> Sergeant Major—Three stripes of dull gold braid.
> Sergeant—Two stripes of dull gold braid.
> Corporal—Two stripes of cloth of the distinctive color of the arm of the service.
> First-class Private—One stripe of cloth of the distinctive color of the arm of the service.

In the French Navy the uniforms of officers follow in general those of the other nations. The rank of commissioned officers is shown by means of insignia on the tops of the epaulets, with uniforms of which epaulets form a part, and by decorations on the cuffs of the sleeves of the frock coat and service sack coat. These sleeve decorations are as shown by the illustrations:

> Vice Admiral—Three silver stars.
> Rear Admiral—Two silver stars.
> Captain—Five stripes of gold braid.
> Commander—Five stripes of braid, the second and fourth being silver and the other three gold.
> Lieutenant Commander—Four stripes of gold braid.
> Lieutenant—Three stripes of gold braid.
> Lieutenant, Junior Grade—Two stripes of gold braid.
> Ensign—One stripe of gold braid.
> Midshipman—One stripe of gold braid broken by interwoven stripes of blue silk.

The officers of the line or command branch wear the rank insignia on the dark blue cloth of the coat sleeve; while the officers of the Staff Corps have cuffs of distinctive color beneath the stripes, these colors being for:

> Engineer officers—Violet velvet.
> Medical officers—Red velvet.
> Constructors and Ordoance officers—Black velvet.
> Paymasters—Brown velvet.

On the white service tunic or coat the rank is indicated by stripes upon shoulder straps, these stripes being similar to those worn on the sleeves of the blue frock coat and tunic.

WESTERN COLLEGE'S EFFICIENT WAR WORK

Stirring Recital of Mobilization of University of California to Defeat Germany—3,000 Men in Service.

By HAMILTON M. WRIGHT.

THE University of California has been in the fortunate position of having been able to give to the service of the Government a very large number of men who have had prior military instruction. As one of the land-grant colleges, the university, upon its foundation, in 1868, just fifty years ago, agreed to the stipulation of the Government that military training should be a part of its curriculum. Since that time each student has received two years of military drill under army officers assigned by the War Department. The University of California has, since April, 1917, sent out more than 3,000 men, including students, alumni, former students, and some of its ablest instructors, to serve in the naval and military forces of the nation. Before the war was declared two ambulance units had been sent out to France, and since last April more than 500 men have been recommended for this purpose. Most of them have been placed. The undergraduate men remaining at Berkeley are organized as a unit of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. There are 1,218 university cadets. The corps includes all freshmen and sophomores, and those juniors and seniors who have shown conspicuous military aptitude. The second, third, and fourth year men in the medical colleges are enlisted in the Medical Enlisted Reserve, with orders to continue their studies. The Engineering Reserve Corps includes the engineering students who are in the upper third of their classes in scholarship.

The enrollment of the university this year is 3,326, as compared with 6,042 one year ago. Of these 705 are graduate students, as compared with 902 a year earlier. Of the 858 seniors, only 46 per cent. are men, (the University of California is a co-educational institution,) as against 64 per cent. one year ago. Of the 1,349 freshmen, 41 per cent., or 741, are men, as compared with 64 per cent., or 854 men, last year. In August the School of Jurisprudence had but 31 per cent. of its registration; by December the percentage was 42. More than one-half of these men won commissions. Altogether, every branch and department of the university have eagerly responded to the call to service in the common cause. Moro university men are going every day, and those that remain are fitting themselves better to serve the nation.

Sixty members of the Faculty have on uniforms at the present time. More than 250 men from the university won commissions at the officers' training camps at Presidio. Conspicuous in the service is the University of California Medical School. Most of its alumni are serving or waiting call. The medical school has sent into the service Hospital Unit No. 30, under Major E. S. Kilgore, with twenty-three members of the Faculty of the Medical School among its officers. Dr. William Palmer Lucas, Professor of Pediatrics in the University of California Medical School, is in France, in charge of the Children's Bureau of the Red Cross for France and for Serbia.

Notable among the achievements in medicine in the last year is the discovery by Dr. T. Brailsford Robertson, Professor of Biochemistry and Pharmacology, of the growth-influencing substance "Tethelin," which he has isolated from the Anterior Lobe of the Pituitary Body. Experimentation in army hospitals in Europe and in civil hospitals in America already shows that the power of this substance to promote the growth of tissue will prove of great value in the work of treating wounds. Dr. Robertson upon Sept. 7 last donated his discovery to the university.

Many departments, particularly the Department of Chemistry, have engaged extensively in research on behalf of the National Government, to meet war needs. All of the engineering colleges have been active in this sort of work and have freely lent their equipment and the service of their experts. Many members of the Faculty occupy important positions on scientific committees of the State and national defense. A great number of the research problems being dealt with by the Departments of the University at the request of the War Department are of a confidential nature and the results have not been entirely reached. Of interest will be the investigations of Professors H. M. Hall and T. H. Goodspeed of the Department of Botany, who have been investigating certain native plants of California, which can be used as a source of rubber in case of necessity. Professor W. V. Cruess of the Department of Agriculture has investigated the commercial production of sugar from grapes in case of need. The sweet grapes used will produce 350 pounds of sugar or forty gallons of syrup to the ton of grapes.

As a feature of its effective mobilization, a number of wartime schools have been established by the university, as the University of California School of Military Aeronautics, where 500 men are taking courses preliminary to instruction in actual flight, and the School of Navigation, conducted in connection with the United States Shipping Board to provide some of the 10,000 men who will be needed to officer the nation's merchant marine. Twenty-two men graduated from the first marine course at the university and forty-five are now enrolled. Moreover, new merchant marine extension courses are now being opened in San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Pedro, and San Diego. There are the Ordnance Department of the army, which is now opening its second course with forty-five men, the Institute for Home Service, held in conjunction with the Red Cross; the training of nurses at the Berkeley Hospital, a work which will be greatly amplified by the opening of the new 250-bed university hospital in San Francisco, built at a cost of $650,000 from funds provided by friends of the university. Many graduates of the nurses' hospital are now in France. An innovation will be the opening, at the coming Winter term, of a six months' course in naval engineering with the purpose of training men to qualify as ensigns in the navy. In contemplation, also, are courses in naval architecture and military engineering.

Students who are undecided as to which branch of the service they will enlist in may obtain helpful information at the University of California Military Intelligence Office. It is a clearing house for wartime activity. It was organized on Feb. 28, 1917, under the management of Professor Leon J. Richardson, Associate Professor of Latin. Professor Richardson at once sent out postals and classified all the students and alumni under the card system. His time is spent in assisting young men, and not a few older ones, who are trying to qualify for various branches of the service. There is a demand for fighting men of specialized experience and for trained experts in the war industries.

More than 500 highly skilled men have been placed by the Military Intelligence Office. Some of them are men whose expert training has been peculiarly developed as a result of Western conditions. Take, for example, the men required for the selection and treatment of spruce, the wood almost exclusively used in the manufacture of airplanes. For this work there is probably no body of men in the world equal to those to be found in the spruce belts of the Pacific Coast. The University of California Military Intelligence Office has been assembling a body of excellent men who are capable of going into the spruce belts and picking out suitable airplane timber. These men can follow the wood through the dry kilns and can superintend the processes of treating and testing until there is produced wood of maximum strength, lightness, and resilience.

Another example of the demand for specialized men whose Western training has been of advantage is found in the case of men required to deal with the drainage of trenches. This is a problem in irrigation, and practical irrigation men are invaluable for this work. Among graduates of the university, and of the University Agricultural College, are numbers of men who have had charge of large irrigation works. The University of California Military Intelligence Office is, however, more than a clearing house, acting between applicants and the service. A careful study is made to ascertain not only a man's qualifications, but his deficiencies, for certain lines of work. A man's moral, intellectual, and physical character is carefully tested. For this reason the Military Intelligence Office has been able to supply men of widely varied talents and training to the service.

One of the most popular branches of the service among the university men is that devoted to the air. At any given time there are, as already set forth, 500 men in the School of Military Aeronautics. This is one of the largest War Department Training Camps for student aviators in the United States. Sixty men are taken in the University of California School each week. Major George B. Hunter is Commandant of the Aero School.

The University of California has developed a great number of birdmen and candidates for the aviation service abroad who are now perfecting their flight technique. Three of them, Edward Walsh, Theodore Lyman, Douglas MacMonigle, have already lost their lives while flying in the service. Lieutenant MacMonigle, the last to have given his life, was killed in action on Sept. 24, 1917, near Verdun, while fighting with the French as a member of the Lafayette Escadrille.

From the beginning, university men have seen service with the allied armies. Excellent work has been done by the university in speeding up agriculture throughout California and in encouraging conservation of food resources. Ralph P. Merritt, Controller of the university, is United States Food Administrator for California under Mr. Hoover, the Controller's office being organized to permit this service. No outline of the war work of the university can, however, convey a comprehension of the tireless, earnest spirit behind that work. The mobilization of the university, as President Benjamin Ide Wheeler well said, has really just begun. As rapidly as men of specific training are in demand for specific purposes necessary departments will be created. The university is on a war footing, and it can truly be said that all of its energies are directed to winning the war. Between April 6, and October 31, the university expended $161,000 to carry forward its war work.

ONE OF SPAIN'S PROBLEMS.

One of the curious consequences of the social revolution which is going on steadily, albeit still very much below the surface, in Spain, is the increasing difficulty experienced by the upper classes in deciding on a profession for their sons. In the old days there was never any doubt about the matter. These sons were all destined to "serve the State" directly in some capacity. The most favored capacity was, of course, the army, until the number of officers in the Spanish Army, in proportion to the number of men, became almost a by-word. But if it was not the army, then it was the civil service, and if neither of these two was possible, then it could only be one or the other of the liberal professions, the most popular being that of the lawyer.

The practice is still being continued, but difficulties in the way of achievement steadily accumulate, as first one department of State and then another is "modernized." Thus, as was pointed out in a recent article on the subject at the Segovia Military Academy a short time ago, no fewer than 850 boys presented themselves for the examination for twenty-five places, while at the school of infantry there were more than 2,000 competitors for 300 places. The universities are turning out a constant stream of lawyers, far more, in fact, than can ever get cases, while the competitive examinations for the civil service have done away with the "influence of ministers," which at one time counted for much.

In these circumstances, certain Spanish parents are beginning to be filled with serious misgivings. The fact of the matter is, however, that Spain is only going through what several other countries have gone and are still going through, as they work toward a realization of the fact that all useful labor is honorable labor, and that it is as impossible as it is absurd to make any distinctions in the matter of dignity. Señor Luis Araujo-Costa summed up the situation accurately enough when he said that, in other countries, where industry and commerce were more developed than in Spain, young men were admitted to occupations thrown open by the great industrial houses to those who were qualified "by intelligence, honesty, and industry," and that in Spain this door was almost closed.

As Spain develops commercially and industrially, however, a great change, it is tolerably safe to predict, will come over popular thought on the question of labor, and many barriers will be broken down and swept away which, at the present time, interpose themselves between the son of the grandee and a useful and honorable calling.—Christian Science Monitor.

ENGLAND'S SYSTEM FOR STATE CANALS

SENATOR HENRY M. SAGE of Albany introduced in the State Legislature as a war measure, on Feb. 19, a bill proposing that $1,000,000 be spent for the construction of barges to avert idleness of the State Barge Canal system next Summer and to help clear up the traffic conditions in the East—the congestion of railroad transportation that brought about the recent compulsory closing of some of the nation's industries. New York State maintains a canal system highly improved along some routes, less highly along others, but workable throughout. On account of the insufficient number of boats and barges to ply these waterways, the system is kept up on an inefficient basis.

According to W. W. Wotherspoon, Superintendent of Public Works, the State keeps the Barge Canal lighted from end to end, and operated by lock tenders and other workers day and night. It is thus possible to make a run from Buffalo to New York Harbor, towing the loaded barges with tugs, in five days. This fact was established by records made during the last canal season. The season opens early in May and continues up to the time that the weather conditions make navigation impossible. During the same period of observation, which was before the crisis came in freight congestion, the average time of hauling freight from Buffalo to New York by the railroads was eleven days. The cost of canal transportation is at least 20 per cent. cheaper than that of the railroads.

A good deal of the grain shipments, together with other cargoes of material for the Allies and for our own consumption, comes from the West by way of the Great Lakes. Already the Federal Government has assumed control of the shipping on the Great Lakes and on the coast for the purpose of co-ordinating the two branches of transportation—the railroads and the waterways. It has as yet made no move to take the Barge Canal system of New York in charge. The importance of such a step is urged on the ground that the canal system forms a vital link from the West to the seaboard and becomes a carrier of more than local moment. It is capable of handling an almost unlimited amount of freight without affecting the terminals in the vicinity of the City of New York.

The barges, it is pointed out, could be moved by motor tugs through the canals and down the Hudson River, where the cargoes could be transferred directly on to the ships. A point of interest bearing upon the coal situation is that cities like Watkins and Ithaca, both in direct communication with the canal, are within 100 miles of coal mines in Pennsylvania. Without overburdening the railroads, this route might be employed during the Summer months for the purpose of bringing fuel down to the city and storing it in yards and warehouses in preparation for the Winter months.

In advocating the canal movement, William B. Rogers of the Motor Boat Magazine expressed the opinion the other day that, should the Government decide to take the matter under consideration, it would not be doing anything new or extraordinary; that England, having suffered a traffic situation similar to ours, had already been obliged to resort to just that method.

"Over there," he said, "in order to control the working of the British canals, a Canal Control Committee was formed. Just as in this country, after the period of prosperity of the canals came to an end it was a difficult matter to raise money to improve them. Consequently, with very few exceptions, the canals of Great Britain are in about the same condition as they were eighty years ago. In spite of this the canals of Aire and Clader, as an example, carried 2,500,000 tons of coal yearly to Goole and Hull.

"Following the outbreak of the war, canal men were recruited, entered munition factories, or found other better paying work. By the end of 1916 it became evident that, unless some means were taken to prevent this, the canals would have to stop working within a short time. Consequently, the Board of Trade took over all the chief independent canal companies in England on March 1, 1917, and a Canal Committee was appointed to manage them. The principal object of the Board of Trade in taking over the canal companies was to relieve the railroads. It was found necessary, however, to go further and to help the canal companies in order that the waterways might be kept in a high enough state of efficiency to enable them to carry the required amount of freight.

"The committee, with Sir Maurice Fitzmaurice at the head, consists of representatives of the Board of Trade, the War Office, the Ministry of Munitions, the railway companies, the canal companies and carriers. It controls 1,202 miles of waterways in England, and 304 in Ireland, besides which the Railway Executive Committee controls 1,025, making a total of 2,227 miles out of about 2,500 miles under Government control.

"In March, 1917, there were 1,200 boats on the canals idle for want of men, the number of workers having fallen from 8,273 to 5,452. The committee succeeded in obtaining more men, and increased the pay of all the workers to the basis of what railway men were receiving. New men were trained in a school established for that purpose, and in some cases successful efforts were made to bring back experienced men who had left that field of work for offers of more lucrative employment. It has been suggested by the Board of Trade that firms should assist the Government by making use of the waterways to the fullest possible extent. Sub-committees have been appointed in all of the important shipping centres for the purpose of giving advice to the shippers and extending the use of the waterways."

The plan, as proposed in the Sage bill, is to make the State a 51 per cent. shareholder in a barge-building corporation, with a proviso for the dissolution of the company after the war. The bill also provides for State control of barges not leased to private parties.

GENERAL NEWS AND NOTES OF THE MUSICAL WORLD

This Week to End Opera Season—The Metropolitan Carries Out All Its Plans—Record of Year Officially Told—Ten Years of Director Gatti.

GRAND opera as a polyglot affair has existed during practically all of the Metropolitan's thirty-five years, except once after the Opera House fire and again at the time of the Spanish war. In some respects, the season that will close with the present week on Broadway resembles no other in this period so much as it does the first year of the house, when New York society welcomed to its then new and "uptown" theatre a tradition of triumphant Italian opera maintained for two generations before in other parts of town.

The golden age of Verdi gave place abruptly to a new era of Wagner's revolutionary music drama, in turn to be replaced by a brilliant decade of French opera on the return of Abbey and Grau. The present century brought an alliance of varying elements, Italian and German, less frequent French, occasional English or, better, American. One year ago last week, a third of the established repertory was summarily dropped, for the first time in Metropolitan history, by the exigencies of the world war.

The season now closing has been, by official admission, the most difficult in the history of opera in modern times, not only here but abroad. It has not been chiefly a financial difficulty, for the house has prospered, though less than last year, when the receipts were the greatest ever known. In the matter of securing artists and making a practically new repertory, the war brought problems well-nigh insuperable, not yet completely solved, at all events, and likely to be increasingly felt next Fall.

Changes Due to War.

Some water has flowed under bridges—and over submarines—since the day in April of last year when Captain Richard Aldrich wrote in this place of the new conditions obtaining in opera following America's entry into the European conflict. As he then said, the declaration of war against Germany naturally caused much anxiety to the Metropolitan management concerning its effect upon the German artists and their reception by the public. Their nationality, their personal feelings, reports as to what they might have done or omitted to do in their private capacities, had not as yet affected their relations with patriotic audiences. The banishing of all opera in German subsequently had the effect of eliminating most of the stars singing that language, including several of Teutonic training among the native or naturalized American singers.

Among artists of the Italian group, the difficulties of the war were met at first by their decision to remain in this country during the Summer, or to venture afield no further than South America. That plan will again be in force this year. Mr. Caruso has refused offers of large sums from Havana and Mexico, even from Buenos Aires. Barrientos and Perini have joined the Bracale tour of Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Peru and Chile. For some time, there have been reports that the younger male members of the Metropolitan company owing allegiance to Italy might be called to active service in the war. The contingency has been met in advance by the engagement of several new tenors here, reinforcing a company more than 50 per cent. American today.

"Contrapuntal Camouflage."

Composers "camouflaged" in English, a device early adopted in London, will be found to have cut little figure in New York's present season, as regards the opera, if not the concert stage. Since the war has become the chief concern of every person in the average theatre audience, the Metropolitan also has done its bit in providing diversion and cheer. No recent opera performance has been without its patriotic moment of the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by all the various conductors, including Mr. Bodanzky, reckoned one of the most accomplished musicians now with the troupe. The opera orchestra was fortunate in having a good, simple "arrangement" of the national air. Elsewhere the cry of "contrapuntal camouflage" was raised against the Boston Orchestra, under Dr. Muck, when that organization innocently adopted a more elaborate version, said to be taken from Herbert's "American Fantaisie."

In the list of operas and other productions at the Metropolitan in the period of twenty-four weeks ending on Broadway next Saturday night and in Boston a week later, the only composers associated with music of the Central Empires have been Mozart, Flotow, Meyerbeer, and Liszt. Those whose works, heard in the previous season, were now no longer heard included Beethoven, Wagner, Humperdinck, and Strauss. Liszt's "St. Elizabeth" alone was produced in English, a work out of the ordinary in its relation hitherto to the oratorio rather than operatic field, and not untimely in its more serious aspect as a "miracle play." Both Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and Flotow's "Martha" were retained in Italian, the language in which they had usually been sung. Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète" was given in its original French. In a similar way, for practical reasons, the Russian operas of Moussorgsky and Borodine were performed in Italian, and a novelty by Rimsky-Korsakoff in French.

Italian, French, English.

Among thirty-two different operas on the Metropolitan's home stage, the list kept by Secretary W. J. Guard shows twenty-three in Italian, seven in French, and two in English. There might be added the artistic production of a new American ballet and one revival of Italian oratorio. A conflict of totals is also explained by the unusual number of double bills, on two occasions a triple bill, and once a gala mixed program.

The double bills include once, "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci"; thrice, "L'Oracolo" and "Pagliacci"; five times, "Cavalleria" and "Le Coq d'Or," and once each "Lodoletta" and "The Dance in Place Congo," "Shanewis" and "Coq d'Or," "Shanewis" and "L'Oracolo," "Shanewis" and "Pagliacci," and "Barber of Seville" and "The Dance in Place Congo." The triple bill offered on two occasions comprised "Shanewis," "The Dance in Place Congo" and "L'Oracolo."

Of Italian composers, Puccini, with four operas, has the highest number of performances, 21; Verdi, also with four operas, 19; Mascagni, two operas, 11; Donizetti's pair, 10; the one opera men and their performances are Leoni, 6; Montemezzi, 5; Leoncavallo, 5; Rossini, 4; Bellini, 4; Zandonai, 4, and Giordano, 3. Other single works sung in Italian include those of Flotow, 5, Mozart, 2; Moussorgsky, 6, and Borodine, 2. Total of presentations in Italian, 107.

In the French list, with one opera apiece, the record is: Bizet, 7; Gounod, 6; Rabaud, 6; Massenet, 6; Saint-Saëns, 4, to which are added Meyerbeer, 5, and Rimsky-Korsakoff, 6. Total presentations in French, 40.

In English there are Cadman, 5, and Liszt, 5. Gilbert's American ballet occurs four times, and twice a gala mixed bill. The "Requiem Mass," twice sung in Latin, if counted in the regular list, puts Verdi with Puccini on equal terms at the top.

A TABLE OF MR. GATTI'S TEN SEASONS.

Below is a table of the principal productions of the Metropolitan Opera House during the ten seasons that Mr. Gatti has been Managing Director of its stage. Over 1,500 representations have been given of something above a hundred titles. Of these, Mr. Gatti has added more than sixty novelties and revivals to the average of, say, thirty works in the repertory when he came.

The former Philadelphia-Chicago allied company before the war gave sixteen operas, of which twelve have not been duplicated by the local troupe, notably "Pelléas" and "Louise." Anna Pavlowa also produced "Coppelia" and other ballets, Toscanini conducted Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," while of late there were three oratorios, last year's "Mors et Vita" and "St. Francis," and the recent revival of Verdi's "Requiem."

The present Metropolitan Company's record of ninety productions of music to dramatic subjects is as follows, with new works starred:

PLAYS AND PLAYERS IN THE NEW YORK THEATRES

From the New Plays

By JOHN CORBIN.

WHAT is the high sign that discloses true art in the reading of blank verse? So much nonsense has been talked and written on the subject that, with whatever angelic impulses, one may well hesitate to rush in. But, obviously, there are two things which should not be done; and in Laurette Taylor's present effort to swallow Shakespeare in three bites she has, in different moments, illustrated both. It is quite fatal to give the iambic rhythm a merely mechanical emphasis; and it is also quite fatal to speak the lines in a merely colloquial tone, with pauses and chance effects of emphasis which, however natural, are the negation of metrical flow. Always the effect should be that of living speech—without which drama ceases to be drama; and always there should be, through all and over all, the music of the iambic pentameter which, though the freest and most flexible of all rhythms, is also the richest and most powerful.

To Milton, as Lowell has remarked, blank verse is set music—a stately mantle with which he enfolds himself consciously as if for some historic occasion; but to Shakespeare it is always simple, direct human speech, which discloses in each character his own true form and pressure. I am rather inclined to think that we have here the true touchstone for the actor. Behind the beauty of the lines is always a greater thing, which is the meaning of the speaker, and the full metrical effect is attained only by making the sense of the lines, their dramatic fitness, the paramount idea.

In all literature there are few finer passages than Caliban's lines describing the magic music of Prospero's island and which he addresses to the drunken butler, Stephano:

Be not afeared! The isle is full of noises,
Sounds and sweet airs that give delight and hurt not.
Sometime a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine ears, and sometime voices,
That, if I then had waked after long sleep,
Will make me sleep again, and then, in dreaming,
The clouds methought would open and show riches
Ready to drop on me, that when I waked
I cried to dream again.

I once knew an actor who, at the first reading of this text, preparatory to rehearsals, bowed his forehead against the table in half-humorous yet very sincere reverence for what is sometimes, though inaccurately, known as The Bard. The producer said, "That is all very well, but what is Caliban driving at?" The actor, one of the most intelligent of our time, was nonplused. The producer pointed to Stephano's answer, "This island shall prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have music for nothing." Still the point was not clear. Then we went back to the preceding speeches. The situation was this: Stephano had been thrown into a fit of abject terror by the supernatural music from Ariel's pipe and tabor. Caliban, who has a plot afoot, is trying to reassure Stephano and urge him forward upon the business in hand. Caliban says, in effect: "Don't let the music scare you. It is really one of the pleasantest things about the island." The plea proves so effective that Stephano's loose mind leaps forward to a vision of himself as King. Thereupon Caliban, no longer the soothing persuader, says, shortly and significantly: "When Prospero is destroyed!" The lines were read again, and a curious thing appeared. Spoken not as a passage of lyric description but as an eloquent, a dramatic, persuasion, they developed new harmonies in the rhythm, new values in the caesuras.

A false tradition has made of certain speeches in Shakespeare—notably Hamlet's "To be or not to be" and Portia's "Quality of mercy"—test passages of elocution, a sort of circus hoop through which every actor has to leap and land upon a plodding horse beyond. Almost inevitably the actor falls into a false and mannered declamation. For these, as for all other lines in Shakespeare, there is only one test—what Shakespeare meant the actor to be "driving at" and whether the actor actually drives at it. Portia's purpose is to persuade Shylock to be merciful. Her beginning, "The quality of mercy is not strained," is as direct and colloquial as Caliban's "Be not afeared!" As her plea develops it heightens and kindles, but it never should lose its quality of dramatic speech—words spoken not at all for their own sake, but for their present effect upon the hearer, in that way, and in that way only, will the true value of their music be manifest.

Bedlamite Drama.

IN "The Servant in the House" Charles Rann Kennedy gave us a play that was not only spiritual in its tone, freshly and sincerely so, but also strongly dramatic. A set of characters whose positions were fundamentally antagonistic clashed upon one another and reacted in a series of developments that led to an inevitable and significant conclusion. In "The Army with Banners" the character scheme is equally promising. A mystic pietist, of the thirteenth-century model, is devoting her life to good works, surrounded by a group of religionists of the modern and worldly type, each in a strongly contrasting attitude. From various motives of expediency they import a popular revivalist, (In a word, Billy Sunday,) whom they represent to her in such terms that she expects in his coming the second advent of Our Saviour. When he arrives in a football suit and leaps in circles about her, uttering floods of barroom slang in the effort to throw into her Early-English soul the conviction of sin and the fear of hell fire, the result should be, as it seems, both dramatic and significant. But, in point of fact, it is curiously the reverse of this.

The first-night audience, intrigued and baffled in its efforts to make head and tail out of it all, took refuge in a mood of levity. Many of us, like the enthusiasts in "Patience," were striving to be Early Englishe before it was too late; but when the final curtain fell upon this "comedy in five acts" the road to yesterday was more completely barred than ever.

What is the difference between the two plays? Probably this—that whereas the characters of "The Army with Banners" are interestingly contrasted one with another there is absolutely no reaction, and for the most part not even a clash between them. They all have a half imbecile air of talking publicly to themselves. In the case of two of them, Mr. Kennedy has indicated that complete sanity is not to be expected. One, Miss Matthison's part of the saintly Mary, is called in the program "A Poor Fool." She is, in point of fact, quite rich and spiritually very wise; but it is frankly admitted that she may seem to be lacking mental grasp—which she assuredly does. The very name of the other is Daffy, and he is well named. But, with or without Mr. Kennedy's connivance, the atmosphere of gentle mania has spread throughout the cast. You may know a madhouse by this, that in it the dramatis personae stand idly about, each discoursing at length about his own ideas of the universe, or about the pain in his elbow, and none of them paying the least heed to what any one else says. And in this respect at least the stage of the Vieux Colombier is perfect Bedlam. The feast of Luna reaches its height in the scene between the Early-English saint and Billy Sunday, who is forever too late. If either of them were to cast a single glance upon the other or take in the meaning of a single word, all bets would be off. But they keep at it indefinitely. In the eighteenth century it cost sixpence to enter Bedlam of a Sunday and enjoy the "comedy" presented there. The price of amusement has risen since then, not to mention the war tax. And it is possible that the popular interest in Poor Fools and Daffys has abated.

Since "The Servant in the House" was first among us, a decade has passed. Now that Mr. Kennedy is going again it would be the brightest of ideas to revive it. At the worst the public, and possibly also Mr. Kennedy, would be made to feel the difference between a bat-haunted belfry and a play. If Mr. Kennedy were to fall into a sincere conviction of his present state of sin, the gain would be great. For his ideas are original and vigorous, his religious feeling profound, and his command of the English language uncommonly rich and stirring.

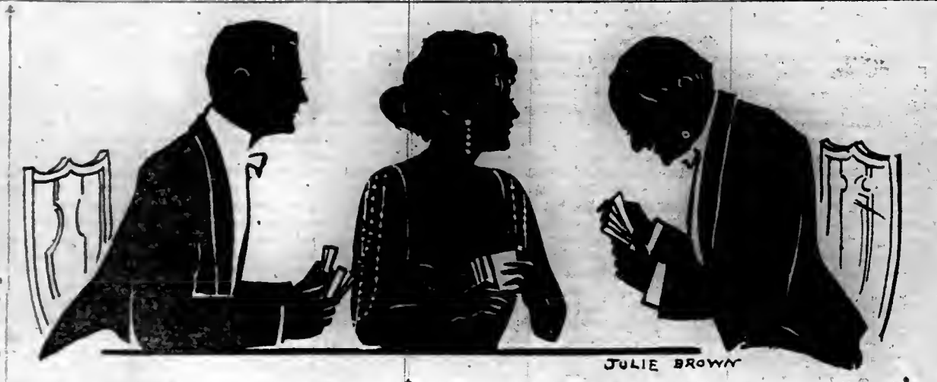
Nazimova and Ibsen.

RECORDING the manner in which Nazimova has "exaggerated," "burlesqued," and "travestied" Ibsen's Hedda, Lawrence Reamer remarks in The Sun that she "has done the public and the drama a service." Her travesty "has killed Hedda more effectively than did all her firing with her father's horse pistols." Henceforth no audience will hope to "read something" into the "precious dullness" of the part and play. As to the lethal effect of Mme. Nazimova's performance, there is unfortunately little doubt. To the generation that had witnessed it, its baleful memory will probably cling forever to the part. Yet it may be questioned whether the play is even yet a candidate for the charnel house.

"Hedda Gabler" is the companion piece, or rather the negative pendant, of "A Doll's House"—as "Peer Gynt" is of "Brand" and "The Wild Duck" of "An Enemy of the People." Having established in Nora the type of courageous feminine revolt, Ibsen gave us in Hedda the type of futile feminine recalcitration—la femme detraquée. Both renounce the traditional rôle of womanhood, but one does it in a spirit of truth to what is noblest in her sex, the other in a spirit of vain and shallow self assertion. Hedda is thus the prototype of our long line of tragically disordered and functionless heroines, of whom Pinero's Iris and his Zoë Blundell of "Mid Channel" are perhaps the most brilliant examples—as Clayton Hamilton will perhaps inform us in the forthcoming volume of his edition of the social plays.

It is by no means certain, and it is in fact highly improbable, that Ibsen was consciously aware of the full import of this Hedda. He was not at all the sociologist, the critic of institutions and tendencies. But he was par excellence the observer and recorder of salient character. The world about him was full of Heddas, and he conceived a story with situations that threw the character into the sharpest possible relief. It is not by accident that, in both this play and in "A Doll's House," the crux of the central situation is the child. It is recorded that, when rehearsing Hedda Gabler, the leading actress, mystified at the heroine's conduct in the matter of Miss Tesman's hat, asked impatiently what the baggage meant by it. Ibsen replied that he was showing to what lengths a high-spirited gentlewoman might be carried by the approach of unwelcome maternity. That is the keynote of the entire play. Hedda demands of life something more brilliant and dazzling than normal life affords, and the result is that everything she touches turns to the sordid and the mean. Grant Allen was on the right track when he said that she was "the young lady whom five times out of ten we take in to dinner," though Brandes, who quotes the remark, seems not to have caught the drift of it. The full meaning of Hedda, in fact, was of necessity a mystery to the generation in which she was created. It is only of late that completer vital statistics, and a general advance in the science of sociology, have enabled us to understand the psychology and the social significance of the woman who renounces motherhood.

Mme. Nazimova has cast the trail of her alien personality, of her shallow, sensation-seeking art, over one after another of the great Ibsen heroines, and in doing so she has pretty effectively killed for the public of the present all possible interest in them. But is this a service? Mr. Reamer knows that it is not, and those who know him are well aware of the vein of subtle satire that underlies his account of this performance.



Ethel Barrymore, Cyril Keightley, and Edward Emery in "The Off Chance," an English Comedy Which Is Contriving to Keep Miss Barrymore Occupied for a Considerably Longer Period Than Had Been Anticipated.

MR. GRUNDY'S EXPERIMENT.

Theatrical people who have been watching the theatrical experiment being made by George D. Grundy marked with interest the transfer, two weeks ago, of Mr. Grundy's "Love's Lightning" from the Lexington Theatre to the Fulton. The interest reached its high point one day during the last week when it was learned and officially admitted by those concerned that the gross receipts at one of last week's performances at the Fulton had been $4.50. This sum was fondly believed to constitute a record until George C. Tyler in the course of a theatrical reminiscence recalled an instance of an entertainment staged some twenty-five years ago by Mrs. Tom Thumb, the total takings of which were 55 cents.

Mr. Grundy, producer of "Love's Lightning," is proprietor of the Grand Central Dancing Carnival. He took over the Lexington Theatre seven weeks ago, and is scheduled to continue in possession until May 4. His only previous theatrical experience had been as one of the backers of "Success," late tenant of the Harris. He began his tenancy of the Lexington with a stock company, charging 25 to 75 cents and giving a free ticket to the dancing carnival with each ticket to the theatre. The losses at the Lexington, accordingly, he views with equanimity; they were the means of introducing an average of 150 new persons to his dancing carnival nightly, and the experiment was therefore worth while as an advertisement for the dancing carnival, if in no other way.

Each of the first two productions at the Lexington, "When Rogues Fall Out" and "The Widow's Weeds," was run for two weeks. "Love's Lightning," the third, played at the Lexington a single week prior to its transfer to the Fulton. At the latter theatre, during the two weeks that "Love's Lightning" has held the boards, the gross receipts have reached $200 only on a Saturday night, ranging at other times from the aforesaid $4.50 to $100. Mr. Grundy figures his total theatrical investment as $25,000. "Love's Lightning," however, was continued for three weeks to comply with a contract which specified a three-week run as a necessary prelude to the securing of the stock rights, and by putting the play into stock Mr. Grundy expects to recoup a large measure of his losses.

Never in the history of Broadway, incidentally, has the distribution of passes been so generous as in the case of "Love's Lightning." Free tickets have been mailed broadcast, and even on the night on which the receipts totaled $4.50 the theatre was crowded. On several occasions, in fact, so many passes were turned in that patrons willing to pay had to be turned away from the box office. The rush of free-ticket holders was so great on Friday night that only about half gained admission to the theatre, and it was necessary for the police to clear the street in front of the theatre at 9 o'clock.

FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

THE vaudeville program customarily given for uniformed men at the Playhouse on Sunday nights will be suspended tonight, and soldiers and sailors are invited instead to witness a special performance of "The Man Who Stayed at Home," a war play. A United States uniform or that of our allies is the only admission ticket needed.

At the Casino Theatre this afternoon the usual vaudeville bill will be given, also free to men in uniform.

THE WEEK'S HAPPENINGS

THE rush is over, the season has passed its zenith, and the week ahead brings with it only one conspicuous novelty. There will be, however, a number of minor programs to fill out the week for the confirmed and incurable theatregoer.

SERVICE and A NIGHT AT AN INN —Tomorrow night at the Cohan.

For the first time in a number of years Mrs. Fiske is making two appearances in New York in a single season. The first was several months ago in "Madame Sand"; the second will be tomorrow night in a translation of Henri Lavedan's drama, "Service." This piece was first acted by Lucien Guitry in Paris the year before the war; since the beginning of the conflict it has been twice revived. The service of the title is service to one's country, and the conflict of the piece is between a militant French army officer and his pacifist son. Mrs. Fiske will be seen as the wife and mother, at first an ally of the pacifist son, but later converted to a preparedness policy.

"Service" will be preceded by Lord Dunsany's one-act play, "A Night at an Inn," first produced in New York two seasons ago at the Neighborhood Playhouse, but until the present moment never seen nearer Broadway. Mrs. Fiske appears only in the longer piece, as "A Night at an Inn" enlists the services of men only. Those who will play it will be Harry Lambart, Tracy Harrow, Robert Vivian, Gerald Pring, Charles Peyton, Owen Meech, Rikel Kent, and Rene de la Chappelle. In support of Mrs. Fiske in "Service" will be Lee Baker, Georges Flateau, Ian Robertson, Robert Lytton, and Alexa Flor, among others.

It is a rare thing for Chauncey Olcott to visit Broadway—the nether portion of Broadway, at all events—but he is scheduled to do so at the Fulton Theatre tomorrow night. His play, in which he has been appearing this season with his usual success in various parts of the country, including upper New York, is entitled "Once Upon a Time," and is the work of Rachel Crothers. "Once Upon a Time," of course, is Irish and romantic and is further calculated to appeal by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott will sing a number of songs. The engagement, it is announced, is for three weeks only.

The fourth program of the season will be offered at the Greenwich Village Theatre on Thursday night, and this time Mr. Conroy and his players will return to their original policy of one-act plays. The pieces on the new bill will be "The Big Scene," by Arthur Schnitzler, translated by Charles Henry Meltzer; "Ile," a play of the sea by Eugene O'Neill, author of "In the Zone," which the Washington Square Players staged early in the season, and "The Maid of France," a symbolic play of the war, by Harold Brighouse, who wrote "Hobson's Choice."

Roland Young will figure as the producer of the Schnitzler play, but will not appear in it. Those appearing in the various plays will include Mr. Conroy, Claire Eames, Harold Meltzer, Margaret Fareleigh, and Francis McDonald.

"Julius Caesar" will be played again at the Cort under the auspices of the Shakespeare Playhouse on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning. During the week of the 22d, in honor of the Bard's birthday, some half dozen performances will be given in place of the customary two.

Speaking of Shakespeare, "Hamlet" will be played in German at the Irving Place Theatre on Wednesday night of this week. Director Christians will play the part.

The Hippodrome is thirteen years old, and there will be a celebration thereof at that playhouse tonight in the shape of an anniversary program. Among the stars of the night will be Julia Arthur, Rose Coghlan, Chrystal Herne, Georgia Caine, Frances Starr, Margaret Mayo, Florence Nash, Belle Story, Fred Walton, and Leo Carrillo, the last named officiating as master of ceremonies. The army, the navy, and the Stage Women's War Relief will be the financial beneficiaries of the evening.

Edith Wynne Matthison will journey into Grand Street to appear at the Neighborhood Playhouse tonight. She will be seen in the woodland scene from "As You Like It," and the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," with Pedro de Cordoba as her principal supporting player.

The Lexington is being brought back to the drama this week by "You Know Me, Al," a musical entertainment written and played by men of the 27th New York Division. The piece began its engagement at the Lexington last Thursday, and will be continued all of this week.

There remains but a single week of the current midnight extravaganza on the New Amsterdam roof, and next week there will be another one. The principal event of the new show will be the return of Will Rogers, who is certain to be greeted with acclaim by the roofians. The new frolic will be unveiled a week from Tuesday.

LAURETTE TAYLOR REPLIES

THE critical fire which descended upon the head of Laurette Taylor after her first Shakespearean matinée, some ten days ago, has drawn forth, not unnaturally, an answer from Miss Taylor. She takes up, in her reply, the principal points mentioned by her critics in their indictments and to each she makes response. The basis of her reply is a protest against enclosing the Shakespearean characters in rigid molds of precedent, to which all interpreters of the characters are expected to adjust themselves. And the detailed case for the defense, as made out by Miss Taylor, is this:

"The trouble with Shakespeare is that altogether too much time and attention is devoted to a meticulous study of him by those who profess to love his works. To spend days in reading pages of notes written by dry-as-dust commentators who have devoted years of utterly useless labor trying to figure out the exact meaning of an obscure phrase here and there is to my mind an utterly futile thing to do. I started out to do it, but I gave it up in sheer dismay. I realized that if I did that there would be no life in my characterizations.

"If you are going to make a family Bible out of Shakespeare, do so by all means. But put him on the front parlor table, and don't attempt to put him on the stage. If I approached him, as some players do, with a sense of absolute awe, and with the idea of looking for things in his wonderful lines that you can only find with a high-power microscope, I would get so enmeshed in the intricacies of scholarship that I would have no time to employ my own humanity. And, after all, the human quality is an essential attribute in any player who hopes for success. The trouble with most Shakspearean performances is that the player spends a lifetime in study, and it shows, believe me, because the net result is too set and precise.

"I confess that I approached the plays in a modern spirit and endeavored to give them a modern interpretation. I rendered myself liable to criticism for that, perhaps, but because I have tried to be modern is no justification for the use of a prehistoric axe by the critics. That is the weapon that a few of them used. It is my humble opinion that any American actress who attempts to put Shakespeare on the stage should be encouraged and not vilified. Her faults, and I have them, should be pointed out to her in a kindly spirit.

"After all, you know, a success in Shakespeare is not an essential condition to the attainment of a dignified place in the theatre. I was under no compulsion of necessity in producing these scenes from the classics. I did it because I found joy in doing it. And I am going to do an entire Shakespearean play when I return to New York again after my road season next year.

"Some people have said that my Katherine was too vulgar, that she was not a lady. Well, in my opinion, Katherine was no lady. She was a vulgar woman, a typical Elizabethan woman, for all that she was supposed to be an Italian. Just read some of the lines which Shakespeare gives her to speak, and which have to be eliminated from any acting version because of their shocking coarseness, and then tell me that she was possessed of any fine instincts. I will say you may and yet again may. She was a vulgar shrew with a certain surface veneer of manners, but nothing more. How else can one explain Petruchio's rough and ready treatment of her?

"There were those who objected to my hesitant delivery of some of Juliet's lines. I did that deliberately and I have no apology for it. Believe me when I say that it is not a mannerism which I cannot check. Juliet was a young girl of 14, a universal type, feeling for the first time the thrill of young love and a sense of its wonderful mystery. Any girl of that age, making a confession of love for the first time, would not be fluent and easy in her speech. She would be timid and hesitant, now drawing within herself, and then again, in an excess of boldness, speaking from her heart. She would be anything but glib. If I were that I should not feel her mood, and feeling is, with me, the most important part of any characterization.

"There were those, too, who said that I violated all tradition in making the oft-quoted 'quality of mercy' speech to Shylock and not elocuting it to the audience, as has been the custom in the past. I cannot do that. I must speak to the person I am presumed to be addressing or any sense of characterization I may be aiming at goes up in smoke. They said, too, that in the earlier scene with Nerissa I was too lively, too gay, too undignified. Of course, my idea is that Portia started out on the masquerade as if she were going on, shall I say, a fun trip? She changes her attitude in the court because she is impressed with the real seriousness and solemnity of the situation.

"Really, you know, I think my diction must be worse than I realized or else certain of my critics are rather hard-of-hearing. Otherwise they would have caught and perhaps remembered that line of Portia's—'earthly power doth then show likest God's when mercy seasons justice.' However, I have had the satisfaction of reading an early review of Ada Rehan's Katherine written on the occasion of her first appearance in the part. She was unmercifully grilled as impossibly rough and unladylike. Yet that same critic, three years afterward, wrote that she was quite the greatest Katherine of her time.

"Which reminds me of a tale that George Tyler once told me about Frank Mayo. The latter was playing in 'Davy Crockett' in a small town up State, and Mr. Tyler happened to meet him at his hotel. The actor was extremely moody.

"'What's wrong?' asked Mr. Tyler.

"'Oh,' said Mayo, 'I'm sick of this part of this play. I can't get away from it. When it was first produced the critics said it was a bad dramatization of a half dime novel. Ten years afterwards they began to refer to it as an idyl of the backwoods. Now I'm dermed if they don't call it a classic.'

"Time's whirligig works strange miracles. Mayhap the opinions of certain gentlemen concerning mine own self will change in time. Of course, I know I suffer from a terrible handicap. I wasn't born with a deep chest, a heaving bosom and a heavy voice. These, I have been told, are the fundamental requirements for a Shakespearean actress and nature vouchsafed me none of them. It is regrettable, but true. However, in my public doesn't like me in these rôles, I can only say, with wifely devotion: 'Shakespeare is dead, long live Manners!'"

THE RISE OF LIONEL ATWILL

IF the present season has resulted in bringing any particular performer further into prominence than his fellow players—and it has not been conspicuous for new personalities brought forward—it is probable that Lionel Atwill is entitled to be regarded as the actor thus elevated. At the beginning of the season New York knew little about him; his sole appearance here, exclusive of a brief dip into vaudeville, had been made in a Horace Annesley Vachell comedy called "The Lodger," which had only a brief life. This season, however, he has played leading rôles in no less than five New York productions—with Grace George in "Eve's Daughter" and "L'Elevation," in "The Indestructible Wife," and now with Mme. Nazimova in "The Wild Duck" and "Hedda Gabler," and with "A Doll's House" yet to come. In nearly all of these productions the honors of the performance have been Atwill's—a fact eloquently testified to by the zeal with which New York's managerial ranks are now seeking his services.

As Hjalmar Ekdal in "The Wild Duck."

Atwill is English. Like a number of Englishmen who afterward took up the stage as a profession, he began his working career in the office of an architect and surveyor. Having no great flair for the commercial life, however, he began to take up Shakespearean recitations on the side, and built up something of a reputation in and about London as a reciter. That accomplished, he cast an architectural career definitely to the winds, and made his first stage appearance in the rôle of a footman in "The Walls of Jericho," in the Autumn of 1905.

From that he plunged to Ibsen. The company, headed by H. U. Nellson, toured the English provinces, and Atwill played, among other parts, Captain Horster in "An Enemy of the People" and Johann Tonnesen in "Pillars of Society." His next engagement was also in an Ibsen rôle—Dr. Rank, in Courtenay Thorpe's production of "A Doll's House." There followed a long Australian tour, and he returned to London just in time for a part in "Milestones," the first conspicuous success with which he was identified. The London "Milestones" ran for two years, and Atwill stayed with it during that time in the rôle of Arthur Preece.

Next he played Michael Doyle, the Herbert Kelsey part, in the London production of the Hattons' "Years of Discretion," but that piece failed to find in London the favor which it enjoyed in New York, and accordingly he went soon afterward to "The Poor Little Rich Girl," in which he played the father. Like "Years of Discretion," Miss Gates's play was not popular in London, but its unusual qualities attracted the attention of Miss Horniman, and the engagement was accordingly the means of introducing Atwill to the Horniman players. Accordingly he went to Manchester for a season with them, returned to London briefly to play Prinzevalle in Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna," and then went back to Miss Horniman as her associate director. Here, playing many rôles and staging many plays, he laid the foundation for his future stage work.

There followed another interlude in July of 1915, when Lily Langtry decoyed him from Manchester to play the leading rôle in her production of a piece called "Mrs. Thompson." The play proved a sad failure, and Atwill returned to Manchester, but soon afterward Mrs. Langtry became obsessed with the idea that the failure of "Mrs. Thompson" in London made it the ideal play for America. Atwill accordingly left Manchester again, and this time he did not return. His first appearance in America was made under circumstances as inauspicious as can well be imagined, for "Mrs. Thompson," played for a few weeks somewhere to the north of us, scored a failure even more dismal than that in London. Thereupon Mrs. Langtry entered vaudeville, taking along Atwill and Leo Stark, another member of the "Mrs. Thompson" company. The three played a piece called "Ashes" for the balance of the season.

The appearance in "The Lodger" was made early last season—Atwill co-starring with Julia Ralph, who is Mrs. Atwill. This starring venture, although somewhat ill-advised, had the effect of compelling audiences to think deeply in an effort to recall where and in what they had previously seen Lionel Atwill and Julia Ralph, and accordingly was beneficial in that it did something to fix their names in the public mind. The play was seen for a week at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, and force of circumstances then compelled its removal to the Bandbox, where it suffered the fate of all other pieces which ever dared defy the inaccessibility of East Fifty-seventh Street.

For the remainder of the season Atwill was little heard of, but last Summer he played an important part in the interesting répertoire experiment which George Foster Platt made in Milwaukee. Here, with Cathleen Nesbit, Cecil Yapp, and other well-known players, Atwill played in Masefield's "Nan," four plays of Dunsany's, Shaw's "Ynn Never Can Tell," Wedekind's "Such is Life," and other plays. Probably his greatest Milwaukee success was made as Anatol in the Schnitzler episodes.

As George Tesman in "Hedda Gabler."

News of his work in Milwaukee may have reached Broadway, or—more likely—it may have been just a twist of the wheel of fate which gave him his chance with Grace George early in the season. At all events, he achieved two distinct triumphs in Miss George's productions of "Eve's Daughter" and "L'Elevation," and when Miss George abandoned her répertoire season Atwill was firmly established. At present, in the Hopkins Ibsen productions, Atwill is riveting his position as one of the most valuable stage importations from England in several seasons.

GOSSIP OF THE STAGE AND STAGEFOLK

Who They Are

WHEN the authorship of a play is credited to two writers, one an established playwright and the other an unknown, it is always reasonable to suppose that the piece was largely the work of the established playwright. This has been the assumption in the case of "Nancy Lee," the authors of which are Eugene Walter and H. Crownin Wilson, and it is somewhat anti-climactic to investigate the circumstances and to discover that such was indeed the case. "Nancy Lee," as it is now being acted at the Hudson, is almost entirely the work of Mr. Walter—which fact, however, does not render wholly without interest all inquiries into the identity of H. Crownin Wilson.

Wilson, original author of the play, is an English Army officer, rank unknown, reported to be at present in Egypt. So far as can be ascertained, there is no one who knows him in New York; not even Mr. Walter, his collaborator, has ever seen him. Wilson's play was originally called "The Tricky Mrs. Trevor," and, so far as is known, was his first. A little less than two years ago "The Tricky Mrs. Trevor" was one of two manuscripts referred to Mr. Walter by a local manager as promising material; the other was a play by Alexandre Bisson, who wrote "Madame X."

Walter saw in the Wilson play a possible rôle for Mrs. Walter, (Charlotte Walker,) and accordingly spent several months in rewriting it. When he had finished he discovered that the manager who had given him the manuscript was not empowered to act for the author, and it became necessary to begin fresh negotiations with Wilson's London agents. When matters had been satisfactorily adjusted Walter sent the play to A. H. Woods, and it was produced just a year ago under the title of "A Small Town Girl." On this occasion Miss Walker played the lead and John Mitchell the Lewis Stone rôle, (after Robert Hilliard had rehearsed it for a week or so,) and Lucille Watson and Leo Donnelly were others in the cast. The piece was seen in Baltimore and in Pittsburgh, and then halted for repairs. On the night of the opening production in Baltimore H. Crownin Wilson, the original author, entered Bagdad with the British army.

This season, the repairs having been made, the piece was again offered to Woods, who refused it. The present production has been made by Mrs. Henry B. Harris, and indications shortly after the premiere were that the piece would be distinctly successful. The principal problem of the management is how to break the news to H. Crownin Wilson, who to date is not even aware that the play has been produced here.

GRACE NOLAN, who has recently fallen heir to the rôle of the pert stenographer in the third act of "A Tailor-Made Man," is one of the Nolan sisters—which, perhaps, is no more than might be expected. The fact takes on additional importance, however, when it is considered that two of the other Nolan sisters, Agnes and Alice, are, respectively, Mrs. George M. Cohan and Mrs. Sam H. Harris.

There is a fourth sister—Lola, who has appeared with Frank Otto in vaudeville under the team name of Otto and Merrill. Merrill, in fact, was the name used by both Mrs. Cohan and Mrs. Harris when they appeared together professionally, but Mrs. Harris, when she returned to the stage for a brief period two years ago in the 1916 "Cohan Revue," used her real maiden name, Alice Nolan.

The four Nolans never played together, else the phrase might have become as famous a one as the Four Cohans. Frank Otto, partner of Lola, the fourth of the series, is at present in "Going Up," and Miss Merrill, alias Nolan, is accordingly enjoying a period of luxuriant idleness.

IN theatrical circles the impression seems to have gained ground that Hubert Osborne, who is down on the Punch and Judy program as the author of "April," is in reality Charles Hopkins, the Punch and Judy impresario. Mr. Osborne, however, is a person all to himself, being at present the holder of the McDowell Club fellowship at Harvard. Mr. Osborne's Harvard connections, furthermore, bring to light the interesting fact that "April" is at least an indirect product of George Pierce Baker's Harvard dramatic factory. At all events, "April" is reported to have been revised under Professor Baker's supervising eye.

As for Mr. Osborne, he is by way of being something of a practical man of the theatre. He has been an actor, and was Mrs. Fiske's stage manager for her production of "Erstwhile Susan." Another play of his, entitled "The Good Men Do," having to do with the life of Shakespeare, was produced not long ago in Philadelphia, and still another piece, called "Over Here," is in the hands of Mr. Hopkins, and probably will be seen hereabouts before long.

FRED (alias "Freddie") SOLOMON, who enters the first act of "The Rainbow Girl" in the garb of a parson, is making his first stage appearance in eighteen years. In these eighteen intervening years he has been an orchestra leader; prior thereto he was one of the best-known comic opera comedians on the stage and possessor of an undeveloped talent for music. It was during the run of a piece called "The Ballet Girl" that Sam Harrison, manager of the company, (and now, it so happens, manager of the New Amsterdam Theatre, where "The Rainbow Girl" is playing,) took Solomon from the ranks of the actors and made of him an orchestra leader. The occasion was an emergency—the illness of the regular leader.

Solomon did so well as an orchestra leader that he forthwith left the stage flat and devoted himself to conducting. At present, in addition to playing the small part of the parson, he understudies the Sydney Greenstreet rôle, plays the organ for the off-stage prayer meeting, is an assistant stage manager, arranges the music, is musical librarian for Klaw & Erlanger, and is prepared to step into the place of the leader of the New Amsterdam orchestra at a moment's notice.

SYMBOLISM IN THE DRAMA

With Particular Attention to That in "The Army With Banners"

By CHARLES RANN KENNEDY.

THE ways of the symbolist to certain people may be like God's—past finding out—but, like His, they have their foundations in reality, yield total truth, and work to a purposed end organically from within. The photographic camera knows them not, nor may they be detected by the strongest microscope, yet they are open to the observation of the simplest minds—in fact, the simpler the better—if only the proper apparatus be brought to bear upon them. Moreover, adapted as they are, in a procession of significances, to the varying receptivities of the human understanding, they offer in their measure help for everybody. And that is why, in one form or another, symbolism has been employed universally in the making of plays, from the first dawn of dramatic history down to the present time. Even the theatrical photographer, the slice-of-lifer, cannot entirely escape it, and the masters of craft have used it without exception.

Some people see but little in a piece of symbolism, and yet enjoy it. Some see much—and don't. It all depends upon the symbolism and the person. The secret is not to let on that it is symbolism at all. Then everybody will be happy. Two little anecdotes in connection with my "The Servant in the House" will illustrate the point.

When I first produced that highly symbolical play in this country it was witnessed by a beautiful and distinguished lady, a noted public speaker, the wife of an English member of Parliament, who declared she found it fascinating. She took exception only to one trivial point. She didn't like my Hindu butler one bit. "Now, really, Mr. Kennedy," she drawled, "would any decent, respectable English family permit for one moment the atrocious liberties, the impertinences even, that you make that man take in the play?" I assured her they would not, adding as urbanely as I knew how, "Nor did they in old Jerusalem. They crucified Him, you remember, on that very point." She fixed me with the humoring eye of one confronted by some sudden lunacy. So I hastened to interpret my symbol. It was her first intimation of the divine significance of that interfering butler of mine. "Oh, I see," she gasped lamely; and to this day imagines that she did. But I have been persona non grata with her ever since.

My second anecdote I give on the authority of a friend who vouches for its truth. "The Servant in the House," during its run at the Savoy Theatre, was visited by a Methodist minister, accompanied by a Bishop of the Episcopal Church. Both were intensely moved by the performance and applauded vigorously. On leaving the theatre for a little time neither spoke to the other, their emotions proving too strong for that exercise. Then the Bishop found heart of grace and spake with his tongue. "Well," said he, "if I had been told that I, a Bishop of the Episcopal Church, should ever sit for two and a half mortal hours and watch the Lord Jesus Christ being visualized on the stage I should never have believed it!" "What!" replied the other, aghast. "Was that the Lord Jesus Christ?" And promptly hated the play.

This comes of interpreting your symbols! In the first instance, if I had only held my tongue my English friend would have gone on rejoicing in my ironic humors, still finding them fascinating; in the other, if only the Episcopal Bishop had held his that Methodist minister would still be choking with sympathy for Bob the Drainman and his cute little girl, still feeling kind of good for the glad hand and uplift at the end of the play. As it is, I have earned two more bitter enmities for life. Notwithstanding which solemn warnings, I now proceed with that unwisdom for which I am becoming notorious, to explain the symbolism of my latest "effort"—"The Army with Banners."

I suppose it may be conceded, without too great a stretch of the imagination, that great changes are going on in the world. I suppose it is at last apparent to the meanest intelligence, that envy and malice, a too devoted allegiance to the autocratic past, to the plutocratic present, and to the cowardly save-your-own-soul selfishness of a lying revivalistic religionism, and the pseudo patriotism that knows no higher warship of that sacred symbol, the flag, than waving it for merely personal and class advantage, have now accomplished their damnedest, and are rapidly bringing us to the end of Something. To many of us, Jews and Christians alike, adopting the symbolism of the religions of our upbringing, that Something is the end of this world, this aeon, the existing order of things. It was with some such analysis as the above in my mind, representing, as they do, certain elements widely prevalent in the human heart in the early part of the year 1914 Anno Domini, that I devised those persons in "The Army with Banners," labeled respectively Julia Manners, a Lady of Good Motives; Jsh Limp, a Man of the Past; Timothy Hadge, a Man of the Present; Tommy Trail, a Man of the Minute, and Pomeroy Wragg, a Man of Almost Any Time. The labels represent the symbols, and it hardly matters to the integrity of the story whether they be perceived intellectually or not. The persons remain genuine persons, notwithstanding.

But, to some of us, the catastrophe now being accomplished means more than the end of the present order; it means the beginning of an entirely new one, full of glorious promise; in a word—still adopting the symbolical language of our religions—"a new heaven and a new earth." To some of us this is not even a new thought. We have been uttering it for years. I myself, for instance, am that American playwright who produced and published "The Terribis Meek" three years before the beginning of the war, warning therein the world against the savageries of autocracy and imperialism. I sent a copy to the Kaiser, who returned it. I, too, wrote "The Idol Breaker," dedicating it to the people of the United States when I took out my first naturalization papers; a play dealing with the entire problem of human freedom and that dream of a new civilized democracy for which at this moment our beloved boys are pouring out the rivers of their innocent young blood. In "The Army With Banners" this hope of the world completes my symbol. It is represented mainly through the characters of Miss Bliss, a Poor Fool (ironically); Daffy, a Man Out of Time Altogether, and that great expectation running through the play from end to end for which the universally accepted name in all religions is the Coming of the Lord.

The war itself is touched upon, of course, but not exhaustively. I have been concerned mostly with its divine counterpart now taking place up in the heavens, for which the symbolical Scriptural name is Armageddon. This I have striven to render illuminative, as a witness to the spiritual issues now being worked out in every heart. I offer it out of the love and loyalty of my own heart to the citizens of my adopted country and to the distracted world.

A word may be said as to the symbolism underlying the setting of my play. The action takes place in a Gothic hall of the thirteenth century, formerly a nunnery, now an orphanage. This gives me the opportunity of one special argument I wished to maintain in the play, namely, the destruction that inevitably set in when we departed from the great tradition of Christendom, as it came to fruit in the Gothic centuries. Secularization of life, the arts, and so forth began the whole business. Then came protestant individualism—save your own soul. Then industrialism, the Manchester School of Economics, the new autocracies and imperialisms, Germanic efficiency, savagery and the devil.

In "The Army with Banners" I have silhouetted the Babel buildings of the modern world against the great cathedrals, our modern anarchies against the mediaeval trades guilds, the low-down vaudevilles jocosities of modern devil-worshipping revivalism against the sacred fun of Saint Francis; and I have incidentally joined up the thought, the art, and the philosophy of the awakening transcendental and experimental schools with the work of Aquinas, Roger Bacon, and Giotto. This I have done, not merely as an artist, selecting what I felt best suited for my purpose; but also as a Catholic convinced of the everlasting truth of the mighty creed I profess. And I have done it in the form of a play, a comedy, demanding no more special knowledge or intricate appreciation of symbolism on the part of my audience than did "The Servant in the House" before it. I write for common people in the language they understand, always. That's why my jokes always go with them. There is a conspiracy afoot between us common people all the time, and the joke is ons of them. I do hope they will never find out that I am a symbolist, or they will put me down (as Daffy says in the play) for something serious at once; and then all my little jokes will go for nothing. This is too serious a moment in the history of the world for us to be solemn. Especially now, when the clouds are beginning to break and show the light. Presently—in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye (in itself a kind of a divine winking)—the Lord will be coming in the clouds of the glory; and we shall have something safer, better than democracy here in our very midst. The New Jerusalem! And the endless Fun of the Divine Commedia of Eternity!

UP AND DOWN BROADWAY

SOMETHING of a feud has developed between the impresarios of New York's two gardens of midnight entertainment, and if it continues the prospect is for midnight revues of an elaborateness undreamed of before the days of competition. To be sure, New York has had two midnight roofs—those of the New Amsterdam and the Century—in operation before, but on the previous occasions the operating genius was Florenz Ziegfeld in both instances. With the taking over of the Century by Elliott, Comstock & Gest, however, and their subsequent decision to operate the roof as per usual, Mr. Ziegfeld has been furnished with his first rival in the midnight field.

The rivalry began with a dispute as to the right to use the name Cocoanut Grove, and was next aggravated by the tempting away of Mr. Ziegfeld's roof manager, John Henry Mears, who did much to make a success of the top of the New Amsterdam. A little later the popular White-Rock team, who had been appearing in Mr. Ziegfeld's entertainment, were signed as Elliott-Comstock-Gest allies. (The pair will not be seen on the Century Roof, but are withdrawing from the other midnight entertainment.)

Just before the opening of the Century Roof, some one, name unknown, tempted away two of the entertainers. One of them, a Miss Leitzel, is already appearing under the rival tent; the other, Lillian Lorraine, will presently do so. Also, dark rumors of structural defects in the Century Roof reached the ear of the city authorities, and reports are that expensive alterations were necessary before the Century Grove could be opened.

Several entertainers were added to the New Amsterdam show the week before the rival attraction was opened, and next week there will be a clean sweep, with a new and augmented force of performers to compete with the Century. In other words, the war is on.

One of the corollaries of the overcrowding of Washington these days is unprecedented prosperity for the theatres in that city. The number of playhouses, of course, is geared to the prewar population, and a population which was not made up of particularly eager theatregoers, at that. Probably twice the number of theatres could be profitably operated at present, and the result is highly gratifying to the Washington theatre owners. Washington's two first-class theatres, the National and the Belasco, generally close their seasons early, far in normal times nothing is quite so dead as Washington in Summer. This year, however, the National, the Klaw & Erlanger house, will be kept open as a first-class theatre all Summer and will be used largely for tryouts. It is probable that the Shubert house, the Belasco, also will remain open.

Under these conditions, of course, Washington becomes an ideal spot for tryouts. Its advantages are at least three in number. There is, in the first place, its accessibility to New York and the excellent train service. Secondly, there is the prospect for good business—not to be overlooked even during a tryout. And, third, there is the fact that in Washington these days one finds a cosmopolitan audience and consequently one which is likely to be more efficacious than the insular variety in helping the producer to reach a true conclusion as to the merits of the matter in hand.

A cable from London Friday night announced that the long run of "Romance" at the Lyric is finally about to come to an end—a run which has extended almost to the 1,100th performance, a matter of about two and one-half years, unbroken in any way. The closing of "Romance" will leave "A Little Bit of Fluff" at the Criterion with the London longevity field to itself, for that piece has almost completed its third year, and not even London is able to explain the reason. To be sure, "Chu Chin Chow" and one or two other pieces have run a year or more, but in London a run is not considered long until it approaches three years.

Doris Keane, who has established herself as a London favorite in "Romance," will rest for a few months and then reappear at the Lyric in September in Avery Hopwood's "Nobody's Widow." In London the piece will be called "Roxanna."

The newest Belasco recruit, according to the rumors which fly up and down the Rialto, is Fay Bainter. Miss Bainter is about to appear in a musical comedy, "The Kiss Burglar," and after a brief season therein she will pass under the Belasco management. Jeanne Eagels has already been announced as a next season Belasco acquisition.

Another well-known performer who is about to invade musical comedy is Florence Nash. Miss Nash, so the gossip mongers have it, will be starred in a musical version of "The Melting of Molly," to be presented here during the Summer months by the Shuberts.

The prosperity being enjoyed by the new Griffith picture, "Hearts of the World," has led the managers thereof to the conclusion that it would do just twice as well if it were shown here in two theatres at once. Accordingly, so goes the report, negotiations are under way for a second theatre. A single attraction has never held the boards of two Broadway playhouses simultaneously.

Speaking of theatres, it is now being whispered that Billie Burke will sooner or later make her appearance hereabouts in the Billie Burke Theatre. Extensive research, it is said, has revealed the fact that New York is in active need of a theatre, and it is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ziegfeld will consider erecting one.

A play called "Midnight," which began its career out of town a week or so ago, is giving signs of desiring to enter the Belmont in the near future. Charles J. Carter, now holding the boards of the Belmont with a magical entertainment, is giving corresponding signs of departing.

A dispatch from London has it that Major Leslie Faber, who is well known here as an actor, is among the missing. Faber appeared here soon after the war began in the leading rôle of "The White Feather, (now "The Man Who Stayed at Home,") and a little later in a revival of "Diplomacy." He enlisted in 1915.

THE STORY OF PAULINE LORD

PAULINE LORD has made three distinct appearances in New York this season as a leading woman, but the fates have so arranged matters that she has not enjoyed the portion of limelight which commonly accompanies such an achievement. The first of these appearances was in August in Arthur Hopkins's production of "The Deluge"—in which piece, being the only woman in the cast, her opportunities were legion. Unfortunately, however, the play endured for only two weeks, and so an excellent performance on the part of Miss Lord was spent on sixteen scattered audiences. Playgoers have a baffling habit of remembering the successes and forgetting the failures, and so Miss Lord found herself not much further advanced so far as the popular judgment was concerned.

The experience was duplicated a little later in "Under Pressure," which piece, played here without results earlier in the season, was brought back to town to the accompaniment of barren benches at the Norworth. Again a good performance by Miss Lord—comedy this time; the first had been drama—wasted itself on the desert air.

Now, however, in "April," Miss Lord is given opportunities greater than in either of the preceding pieces—she appears in one act as a girl of 18 and in another as a woman of 38. While it is not claimed that "April" is the play which will bring Miss Lord heavily to the fore, it will at least, during its tenancy of the Punch and Judy, advance her some distance along the dramatic pathway. And by that accomplishment of the near future it will outdistance both "The Deluge" and "Under Pressure."

Miss Lord's native town is San Francisco, and it was there that she began her stage career, appearing with the stock company at the Alcazar, whence have sprung any number of well-known players. Nat Goodwin, observing her work, drafted her from this institution after a year or so, and she appeared with the Goodwin company for three seasons. Officially, her work was character rôles, but she also understudied the leading woman, and on many occasions played the leading rôles. These years of course proved invaluable for training purposes.

They were followed by another training season with the Hunter-Bradford Players, a well-known stock organization in Springfield, Mass. Then came "On Trial," the leading rôle of which Miss Lord played in New York for a time near the end of the run here, when vacation days had beckoned to Mary Ryan. Next she played the leading feminine rôle in Marion Fairfax's (Mrs. Tully Marshall's) drama, "The Talker," and in it scored her first New York success. "The Talker" was the last production made by Henry B. Harris, who went down on the Titanic; had Mr. Harris lived it is likely that Miss Lord would be already widely known among theatregoers, for Mr. Harris, it is known, had ambitious plans for her.

Miss Lord's varied work during the current season, however, has made a realization of those plans, or others equally important, a distinct possibility of the near future.

BROADWAY—"The Doctor and the Woman," with Mildred Harris.

RIVOLI—Elsie Ferguson in "The Lie."
RIALTO—Vivian Martin in "Unclaimed Goods."
CASINO—Prisma Motion Pictures in Colors, tomorrow afternoon only.
FORTY-FOURTH STREET — "Hearts of the World."
LYRIC—"Over the Top," with Arthur Guy Empey.
KNICKERBOCKER — James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany."
EIGHTY-FIRST STREET — "Naughty, Naughty," first half, and "The Belgian," second half.

THE Doctor and the Woman," which opens at the Broadway Theatre today, is Lois Weber's screen production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, "K," which is familiar to thousands of readers. The principal part is played by Mildred Harris, and others in the cast are True Boardman, Albert Roscoe, Zella Caull, and Carl Miller. Lois Weber, who has directed a number of successful screen plays, is one of the few women in the business.

This is the fourth anniversary week at the Strand, and in celebration of it Manager Edel is offering a special program. Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" returns to Broadway after an absence of some time, but, according to all advices, he is the same Charlie Chaplin in makeup and manner. His new piece is the first of the advertised "Million Dollar Comedies."

Sharing headline honors at the Strand, Mae Marsh's "The Face in the Dark," by Irvin S. Cobb, will seek to thrill spectators. As Jane Ridgeway in the play, Miss Marsh is the daughter of a secret service man, who, having retired from the service to devote his time to his duties as bank examiner, is the head of a band of bank robbers and counterfeiters. This fact is discovered by his daughter, who adores him, and she has her choice between accusing her father of a crime or allowing the man she loves, who is suspected, to go to prison.

Other numbers of the Strand program will be the Topical Review, including scenes of American troops at the front; Rosa Lind and Giovanni Camello in a duet from "Madame Butterfly"; Dorothy South, a soprano, in several songs; the Strand Symphony Orchestra, and Ralph H. Brigham and Herbert Sisson at the organ.

Elsie Ferguson will be the Rivoli's featured attraction this week, appearing in an Artcraft screen version of "The Lie," adapted by Charles Maigne from the play by Henry Arthur Jones. Miss Ferguson takes the part of Elinor Shale, the girl who sacrifices her own happiness to protect her younger sister. J. Searle Dawley directed the picture, using in Miss Ferguson's supporting cast Percy Marmont, David Powell, John L. Shine, and Betty Howe.

The fifth installment of official Italian war pictures will show the conditions under which fighting is conducted in the Alps.

S. L. Rothapfel's nine-year-old son Arthur is said to have suggested the story for "A Youthful Affair," a comedy in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will appear. Bobby Connelly, a child actor, has an important part in the picture.

Selections from Donizetti's opera "Lucia di Lammermoor" will be played by the Rivoli orchestra, with Hugo Riesenfeld and Erno Rapee conducting. Jeanne Gordon, Annie Rosner, and the Rialto Male Quartet will sing the sextet. Miss Gordon and the Rivoli chorus will be heard in the gypsy song from Act II. of "Carmen." The quartet will also sing "Juanita," using an arrangement by Parks.

"Unclaimed Goods," in which Vivian Martin appears at the Rialto this week, is a Paramount picture said to be a mixture of comedy and thrills. The story is of a little girl who is shipped by express to an uncle in a rough Western mining camp. She arrives safely, but finds that her uncle is being held prisoner by gamblers. It devolves upon the express agent to "feed, water, and exercise" the consignment until the charges on her are paid. At the expiration of three days the ringleader of the gamblers demands that she be put up for auction according to the law governing unclaimed goods. The manner in which she extricates herself from the situation furnishes the climax of the story. Johnston McCulley wrote the play, C. Gardner Hunting put it in film form, and Rollin S. Sturgeon directed it. Harrison Ford, George McDaniel, Casson Ferguson, and Carmen Phillips are in the cast.

This picture replaces "Let's Get a Divorce," the Billie Burke feature which had been announced for the Rialto but which, owing to the illness of John Emerson, its director, could not be prepared for delivery.

The Rialto orchestra, under the leadership of Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston, will play selections from "La Gioconda" as its overture this week. Greek Evans will sing one of Kipling's Barrack Room Ballads, assisted by the Rialto male chorus. Gloria Gale, soprano, will sing "It Is Only a Tiny Garden," by Haydn Wood. The Rialto chorus will be heard in a medley of American airs, and Arthur Depew will play the organ.

The Prisma motion pictures in color will be shown at the Casino Theatre tomorrow afternoon for the benefit of the Fatherless Children of France Fund and the Jewell Day Nursery. In the program are pictures of the Kilauea Volcano, Hawaii; hydroplanes flying from an armored cruiser, wild bird life in the Pacific, an alligator hunt, and rare fish. The performance will begin at 3 o'clock.

At the Eighty-first Street Theatre the following pictures will be shown: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Enid Bennett in "Naughty, Naughty," the story of a New York girl's attempt to make her old home town up to date, and another installment of "The Eagle's Eye," entitled "The Brown Portfolio," by William J. Flynn. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant in "The Belgian," a play about the hopes and intrigues in the lives of two Belgian lovers, and a new story of Chapin's "Son of Democracy," entitled "Native State." There will also be a bill of vaudeville.

Among those associated with moving pictures in one way or another who are now speeding about in the interest of the Third Liberty Loan are Emmy Wehlen, of the Metro Pictures Corporation; Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, of many activities and most recently connected with the Vitagraph production of "Over the Top"; Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, and Marguerite Clark, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The proprietors of airdomes are among the minority upon whom daylight saving works a hardship, it seems. The trouble is that the open air motion picture theatres, popular during the Summer, cannot begin their performances until after dark and, with darkness coming an hour later than formerly and closing time for the theatres fixed by the clock, the time in which they can be open for business each day is reduced by an hour.

Promises of a good moving picture with its purpose of propaganda buried under a self-sustaining story are made for "The Spirit of the Red Cross," which will be used in connection with the second war fund drive of the Red Cross beginning May 20. The picture has been produced by Jack Eaton and will be distributed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry Committee, which works in co-operation with the American Red Cross. The story is of a Red Cross nurse and her soldier sweetheart, with battles, base hospitals, and activity behind the lines worked into the narrative. Peggy Adams plays the role of the leading nurse and Ray McKee is the soldier-in-chief.

The current issue of Progress-Advance, a periodical devoted to the interests of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, contains much advice to exhibitors on how to obtain publicity. One paragraph stands out luminous and illuminating for all press agents not suffering from occupational blindness. It is this:

"The first requisite of a publicity story is that it should contain news."

And a good working definition of news is supplied: "News is something that interests somebody"—that is, somebody besides the star and promoter for whom publicity is sought.

Among the photoplays announced to appear from the William Fox studios are an aquatic spectacle presenting Annette Kellermann, a picture of Theda Bara in the Philippines, and an up-to-the-minute secret service play featuring William Farnum.

Mme. Olga Petrova has returned to New York from Palm Beach and will begin work at once, it is announced, on her next production, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," a photodramatization of the novel of the same name by Gertrude Atherton.

Lou Burstein, President of the King-Bee Films Corporation, has changed his mind about the duration of the war. Confident that the war was in its last act, according to an announcement from his office, he recently began the preparation of a picture that required the transportation of his company to Europe for certain outdoor scenes, but, upon thinking the matter over later, he abandoned the picture and introduced universal military training into his studio instead.

Truant records in Fort Lee, N. J., were broken last week, according to report, when a small-sized menagerie used in a picture was taken to the World Studio there and served as a magnet for school children.

Louise Huff and a number of other Paramount stars are touring the training camps of the West presenting William C. De Mille's sketch, entitled "Food," a satire on the high cost of living.

Douglas Fairbanks will be seen in evening clothes in "Mr. Fix-It," but, according to reports, he does not let his formal raiment interfere with his inevitable athletics.

Philip J. Hurn, head of the Triangle's scenario department, has examined 3,500 manuscripts since the first of the year, according to The Moving Picture World, and accepted forty.

According to reports from England, disabled soldiers are learning how to become cinematograph operators with encouraging success. The Moving Picture World says that the course in training includes special study "in electricity, tuition being given in the construction and use of motor generators, switchboards, and electrical fittings in connection with cinema work. Every man is taught the way to handle films and is instructed in and made familiar with the working of different types of modern projectors. A special training allowance has been granted by the British Government to every disabled man attending these classes."

Having a blowout when you don't want one is easy, but, according to Albert Lena, assistant director for Alice Brady's latest Select Picture, "The Ordeal of Rosetta," having a blowout when you want one is one of the most difficult details of motion picture automobiling. Mr. Lena wanted the blowout to happen in front of the camera, but the small charge of gunpowder in the tire that was to have caused the blowout postponed its activities until long after Miss Brady and her leading man in the automobile had gotten out of the camera's range. A larger charge of powder used in a second attempt went off too soon and, incidentally, almost upset the automobile. The third attempt, it is said, was successful.

A well-known producer, writing upon the function and future of motion pictures, says that the screen may be employed to teach moral lessons "without presuming upon the intelligence" of spectators. Some day some one will prove the truth of this assertion.

The United Picture Theatres of America, the new society of exhibitors organized for co-operative buying of pictures, announces that its activities are extending from the East through the Middle West. The pooling scheme of the members requires, it is said, an initial fund of $500,000 for the purchase of features on the "studio-cost-plus-producer's-reasonable-profit" plan. Instead of leasing prints, United Theatres will buy each picture outright, make its own prints, engage composers to write special music, and distribute everything to the members direct, each paying a part of the aggregate cost.

Several important producers have expressed willingness to do business with the new organization and others are hesitating, according to the announcement.

Having completed "Thais" and "The Splendid Sinner" for Goldwyn, and appeared in opera again, Mary Garden is planning to return to Monte Carlo for the Summer, according to an announcement. Before sailing, however, Miss Garden will give a dinner to her associates of the opera house and studio at which Amelita Galli-Curci, Lina Cavalieri, Cleofonte Campanini, Hamilton Revelle, and Lucien Muratore will be among the guests, it is said.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company yesterday made public a letter received from General Pershing acknowledging the receipt of the "Letter of Cheer" which was sent to him in the war album from the American people. The letter was prepared by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal, and signed by President Wilson and many other public officials. General Pershing wrote:

"France, March 20, 1918.
"Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1,600 Broadway, New York:
"Gentlemen—The receipt of the war album has touched me very deeply. The letter of cheer contained in the album will prove a great inspiration to the American Army in France, and it is my desire that we may prove ourselves worthy of the love and confidence of our people at home as expressed therein.
"The album is indeed a handsome souvenir and will remain in my family as a priceless memento for all time. Many, many thanks, Sincerely,
"JOHN J. PERSHING."

FILMS FOLLOW THE FLAG.

Y. M. C. A. Provides Motion Pictures for Soldiers and Sailors Everywhere.

SPEAKING of exhibitors, exchanges and systems of motion picture distribution, the Y. M. C. A. must be considered as one of the biggest, if not the biggest, of the factors in the business, for it has undertaken to keep America's soldiers and sailors everywhere entertained by screen productions. The association's field includes men in camps in the United States, sailors on ships and soldiers on transports, troops in the trenches and behind the lines in France, all members of all forces wherever they may be for any length of time. In fact, as the association's bulletin on its motion picture work says, "the only place where the films do not follow the fighters is into the clouds."

It is estimated that the Y. M. C. A. directs a chain of motion picture theatres that includes one theatre for every 4,000 or 5,000 men in the army and navy. At Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., for example, there are nine motion picture theatres, in addition to a large auditorium where pictures are often shown, for an average population of 35,000 men. This camp is representative of the other cantonments in America and of naval and aviation training stations, it is said. When the last calculations were made the Y. M. C. A. was circulating more than 7,000,000 feet of film a week in the United States.

Here is quite a task of distribution, as may be imagined, but, according to the organization, the work is being done smoothly, with the patriotic co-operation of experts and exchanges in the commercial field. The big effort is now being concentrated on the much more difficult problem of circulating films among the soldiers in France, primarily, of course, those from America, but also British, French, Belgian, and Italian Allies, and George Dunham Foster, President of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, has gone to France for the Y. M. C. A. to take charge of distribution there. As assistants he has an American film exchange expert and a man who, before the war, routed a circus from one end of France to the other, and so gained experience invaluable to Mr. Foster now. Central headquarters will be established in Paris and four or five branch exchanges along the western front. These, it is expected, will form the main parts of the machinery by which more than 500,000 feet of film, probably 1,000,000 feet by the end of the Summer, will be circulated.

By other and simpler arrangements motion pictures are provided for the men in embarkation and debarkation camps, and on transports. The regulations for distributing films among the sailors on battleships are often upset by the movement of vessels, which cannot be anticipated, but exchanges of pictures are frequently made between vessels meeting at sea, with the result that there is a more or less haphazard, but usually satisfactory, circulation of pictures on the water.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau has charge of motion picture work of the Y. M. C. A., and the officials of the association are enthusiastic in their praise of commercial producers and distributers who co-operate with the bureau without compensation.

PEG WOFFINGTON COMING.

Unusual English Cast to Appear for the Benefit of War Fund.

MASKS AND FACES," the result of the co-operation of a committee consisting of George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur W. Pinero and Sir John Hare, representing the Academy of Dramatic Art of England, and a number of leading actors, including Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Lillah McCarthy, Gertrude Elliott, and Lyall Swete, who appear in the cast, will be released by the World Pictures Corporation on May 6, and exhibited for the benefit of a fund for the children of English actors killed in the war.

The name of the photoplay has been taken from the drama by Charles Reade and Tom Taylor, but the screen story has been based upon "Peg Woffington," the novel which Reade wrote upon the same subject, because it was judged to be richer in incident than the stage work. The famous old story of Peg Woffington was selected by the Academy's committee as affording the best available material for such a production as was contemplated, and it is said that the members of the notable cast have made the most of their opportunities.

The role of Triplet in the motion picture version is played by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson; that of Peg Woffington by Irene Vanbrugh; Ernest Vane by Dennis Neilson Terry; Kitty Clive by Lillah McCarthy; Colly Gibber by Dion Boucicault; Mabel Vane by Gladys Cooper; Sir Charles Pomander by Ben Webster; Lovell and Hunsdon, Pomander's servants, by Daniel Calthrop and Gerald Du Maurier; Mrs. Triplet by Winifred Emery; Colander by H. B. Irving and Scaper by Lyall Swete. Viola Tree, the daughter of Sir Herbert Tree; Stella Campbell, the daughter of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and Gertrude Elliott, the wife of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, appear as members of Rich's Company, and three of the best known child-actors of England, Fabia Drake, Joan Buckmaster and George Itowson, are seen as Triplet's children.

PICTURES AND PROJECTILES.

"Hearts of the World" Company Made the First When the Other Did Not Interfere.

A NUMBER of the scenes in "Hearts of the World," now showing at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, give the impression that D. W. Griffith and his company often worked dangerously near the centre of the war, and, according to Mr. Griffith, they were actually exposed to considerably more than interesting excitement on several occasions. In relating yesterday some of his experiences and observations while making the picture, Mr. Griffith said:

"We crossed the Channel to France and moved behind the firing line into the vicinity of the present fighting. I am not permitted to give the names of the different villages which figured in many of our scenes, but I may say that for a long time our headquarters were Ham. In the party with me were Lillian and Dorothy Gish, their mother, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, George Siegmann, Little Ben Alexander and his mother, my camera man, Billy Bitzer, and several assistants. Two British officers were detailed to accompany us whenever we went near any of the battlefields or within the zone of fire. On three occasions our little party was caught unexpectedly in a bombardment, and on one occasion we had to spend four hours in a cellar.

"That four hours under ground was about the most nerve-racking experience I have ever had. It was not for myself alone that I worried, but I felt that I had taken my associates into a dangerous position and it was necessary for me to get them out again safely. The sound of the shells bursting near by was terrific, and we were glad when the British officers came to tell us that it would be safe to retire behind the lines.

"On another occasion the little town in which we were taking some quiet scenes, at least twenty miles from the firing line, became the object of an air raid. A great bomb fell within thirty yards of the inn in the courtyard of which we were working. Once more we took refuge in the cyclone cellar.

"I don't mind adding, now that it is all over, that Mrs. Gish worried so much about her two daughters' safety that she lost thirty pounds during her stay in France, and that Lillian herself faded away until she was fifteen pounds lighter. The only one who did not lose weight was Dorothy.

"In the course of my trip I had many experiences which upset my previous idea of things. One thing I discovered was that a real hero always ducks his head or runs when a sudden shot or an unexpected attack comes. It is a tradition of the drama that the hero or heroine in times of peril or surprise should move with calmness, almost contemptuous deliberation and composure. Of the tens of thousands of persons I saw in London during the air raids, and in France at the battlefront and in the villages exposed to cannonade, I never saw one person remain motionless when danger came. There was always movement, facial, body, or both.

"The first, and therefore most elemental, instinct seems to be to duck the head, and then comes the urge for greater action. Persons grimace, clench their hands, clutch at their legs, jump about, if only in a circle, and the majority run. They seem to care not where or why. For instance, I never saw but one person who remained quiet during an air raid in London. It was a woman who was in the street when the alarm came. She slowly sank to the pavement and remained unconscious all during the raid. But she was the only human being that didn't move."

Mr. Griffith said that all of the members of the "Hearts of the World" company had returned to America safely last November. He added that on the occasion of a previous trip to Europe before America entered the war he had been wounded in the arm by a shrapnel bullet while in a British trench.

Lillian Gish, who plays the part of The Girl in "Hearts of the World," now at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre; Robert Harron, who is The Boy in the same play, and George Fawcett, the photodrama's delightful Village Carpenter, will soon appear in the leading roles of a picture which D. W. Griffith is making for Artcraft.

IN THE MAIL BAG.

To the Dramatic Editor:

Regarding the adverse criticisms of the Ibsen revival at the Plymouth Theatre may I be permitted to add a word of protest against the manifestly dogmatic and occasionally personal tone of some?

I have in mind one reviewer in particular who suggests that "Mme. Nazimova be persuaded to wash her face," and another who sums up the character of Hedda Gabler by gayly announcing that "the play as a whole and the leading character are slaughtered to make a Broadway holiday." This same gentleman, in sportive mood, makes merry at the expense of the actress's pronunciation of an alien tongue. Possibly in the name of modern realism this play should be limited to the Norwegian language.

May I ask—always with my hat in my hand and "with bated breath and whispering humbleness"—if the province of dramatic criticism includes a cast iron observance of the reviewer's point of view, or is it permissible to vouchsafe to an artist the right to his own interpretation, merely insisting that he be consistent to his own concept of a character? If the former, then it requires no stretch of imagination to foresee a lightless Rialto while the critics meet upon the field of honor to thrash out among themselves whether Hamlet was or was not mad. If the latter, then I am proud to be one of the "small faction of good folk" (again I quote) "who are willing to accept the interpretation of Mme. Nazimova's Hedda as the apotheosis of dramatic art." Granting her the right to think for herself and to see in Hedda Gabler what the critics evidently do not see, I insist that Mme. Nazimova's Hedda rings true.

I cannot grant that Ibsen "introduces us to every-day folk leading a trivial every-day existence." If the French saying is true—"Happy the people whose annals are tiresome"—then the people of Ibsen's creation are never tiresome for they are certainly never happy! Again, I cannot accept the dictum that "Hedda Gabler is light in tone, even perverse, and that she presents no problem but herself, a perverse, potentially immoral woman." Doesn't she really? Immoral she certainly never is. Unmoral, yes—possibly—but immoral, never! She hasn't the courage. She is spiritually lazy and morally a coward. Actual revolt is outside of her comprehension. She is bound hand and foot to convention. As Tesman's wife she obeys the letter, if not the spirit, of the law, as unquestioningly as Aunt Julia would. She hasn't the courage to live, but after being goaded into a hysterical frenzy by the blindness of those two smug domestic fowl, Tesman and Mrs. Elvsted, she at least has the courage to die.

Literature and the stage never fail to award degrees to those who rise to great emergencies, but few, if any—certainly no one in like measure—rise up to defend the outraged beings who go through life choked and tortured by the tyranny of little things. I know of nothing finer than the defense of Ibsen of the right of the individual conscience to exist, or his sympathy with the misunderstood. I know of nothing more exquisitely tender than the last plea of Hedda Gabler—Nazimova's Hedda Gabler—when she says: "Is there nothing that I can do to make myself useful to you two?" If this, forsooth, is a "Broadway holiday," then Broadway is become intensely human.

Another critic finds fault with the manner of Nazimova's first entrance. Should she come skipping upon the stage in order to emphasize the events which follow? Human problems on the stage cannot be limited to mere incidentals of time. Unfortunately something in the nature of imagination is required from the other side of the footlights. Always the audience must be made acquainted with the events which have led up to the opening of the play. Ibsen, more than any other dramatist, plunges immediately into the heart of things. Invariably his characters are swamped with their problems when the curtain rises. Hedda Gabler has had her disillusionment before the play begins. She has spent five months in a matrimonial tête-à-tête with the excellent Tesman. She is plunged into the deadening economies of an unlooked-for poverty. She has before her the expectation of unwelcome motherhood and the prospect of the permanent society of those "everlasting aunts." She is a victim of ingrowing gentility, and we see her at once a quivering, self-tortured, flesh-and-blood protest. One does not harness a thoroughbred race horse to a heavy load and expect the load to get anywhere! And one cannot but feel sympathetic when environment includes a background suggesting the banquet scene in Macbeth and furniture that might have frittered away its ill-spent youth in Hannibal, Mo. In the midst of this incongruous flotsam and jetsam comes Hedda and the chaise longue!

If Mme. Nazimova is to be reproached for giving a too early prevision of the overthrow of a great soul—I lack the courage to say good—then for the sake of consistency it might be in order to insist that the final curtain be held until rigor mortis sets in in order to carry conviction that Hedda's death was real.

If Mme. Nazimova is right then her critics are wrong, and vice versa. The great Norwegian is not here to settle that—he has left that, too, a matter of individual consciousness—but the point is this, would it be beside the question to ask, in the name of that great exponent of individualism, for a little more of the spirit of laissez faire in our dramatic criticisms, and in the name of those same "few good folk" a little less of flippancy in dealing with a serious dramatic production?

PLANS OF THE MUSICIANS.

Eva Gauthier, at her recital on April 22 in Aeolian Hall, will sing for the first time "Four Impressions," by Leo Ornstein, and others by C. T. Griffes and Nat Schildret.

Jascha Heifetz will give his last violin recital at the Metropolitan Opera House on April 28 for the benefit of families of Jewish soldiers and sailors in the war.

Harold Flammer issues a catalogue of new American music by F. M. Class, C. W. Coombs, De Koven, Hadley, J. H. Rogers, Shelley, Treharne, Woodman, and Harriet Ware.

Worcester Festival Plans.

Writing of the Worcester Festival, for which plans are already complete, though the annual event in the Massachusetts city takes place Sept. 30 to Oct. 4 next, a patriotic critic finds that the sixty-first year will be made memorable by an all-American festival, not only in the matter of soloists, but also in the music to be performed. The choral works will be George W. Chadwick's "Judith," a repetition of Henry Hadley's "Ode to Music," and a new production, Mabel W. Daniels's "Peace with the Sword." Arthur Mees will again be the conductor, with Thaddeus Rich, and sixty players of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The soloists will be Louise Homes, Mabel Garrison, Emma Roberts, George Hamlin, Arthur Hackett, Reinald Werrenrath, Edgar Schofield, Milton C. Snyder, and Frances Nash.

WELCOME JEWISH RECRUITS

British Jews Entertain the Soldiers Recruited in America.

Lord Rothschild, according to official cable dispatches received here, presided at the luncheon given in honor of the first American contingent of the Jewish regiment of the British Army when it reached London. Leading English Jews and Zionists were present to welcome the men, and speeches were delivered by Lord Rothschild, Mr. Sokolow, Sir Adolph Tuck, Mr. Kiley, M. P., and the Rev. C. F. Lipson, (representing the chief Rabbi.) Sergeants J. L. Cohen and Ostrowski responded on behalf of the men. Sergeant Cohen is a Fellow of Columbia University and the first Jewish recruit obtained in the United States.

The luncheon ended with Hebrew songs of Palestine sung by the men, in which everybody joined. Most of the Jewish soldiers volunteered in New York at the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission.

Chief Rabbi and Mrs. Hertz have also entertained the first American contingent. They were present prominent representatives of the community and officers of the battalion.

WAR'S EMPHASIS ON HEALTH EDUCATION

Seventy-Five Per Cent. of School Children Have Defects—National Program for the Solution of the Problem.

By DR. THOMAS D. WOOD.
Columbia University, Chairman of Committee on Health Problems of the National Council of Education.

NATIONS are striving today, as never before, for the essentials of existence; the conditions of perpetuity, the foundations of prosperity. War throws a spotlight of convincing clearness upon national defects. The youthful confidence and complacency of our overgrown Republic are shaken to the depths regarding the elements, the sources of national soundness and vigor. We are beginning to suspect, if not to fully realize, that even more essential and fundamental to the integrity and permanence of a nation than scientific progress, political achievement, industrial development, and economic accomplishment, are biologic soundness and fitness, the health of the people.

This national asset—health, while the most essential, is at the present time the most endangered of all our natural resources. We are appalled at the number of our young men, in both voluntary and draft enlistment, who are incapable of defending their country; who are rejected for military service because of physical and mental defects.

While types of disease and weakness are markedly different in their prevalence in and effects upon the sexes, still the welfare of the nation is, on the whole, as seriously threatened by the physical limitations of girls and women as by those of boys and men.

Some there are who in view of recent revelations apprehend this menace to the welfare of the nation. And yet it has been known for years before this great war engulfed us that 75 per cent. of the more than twenty million school children of this country were handicapped by physical defects. While some of the defects which are incapacitating our young men for military efficiency, and which are lowering the ability of our citizens for the business of life develop in late adolescence or adult life, still many of them exist in the children and youth in our schools.

In the mobilization of our nation's resources for the stupendous task of this war, nothing is more dramatic or impressive than the inspiring spectacle of these young men being trained to preparedness for the intensive, the grim business of war. Records even of men in our great training camps, who have been accepted as fit for military service, show that in multitudes of cases, and within six months after the beginning of training, the improvement in health, in vitality, in physical, and general efficiency, has been almost incredible. Shall we not provide as thorough and effective health, care, and physical education for the children of our country as we furnish for the young men in the army and navy?

Lives are being needlessly sacrificed; human power in enormous quantity is left wholly or partially undeveloped; economic loss of staggering extent occurs, because scientific knowledge and practical wisdom are not applied to the prevention of needless weakness and disease, and for the constructive development of the potential health resources of the children of our great country.

The monstrous efficiency of the German Empire in this awful war is due in an important part to the organized health work; the national program of health care and education which has been conducted in that country for the last half century.

The pioneer development in school hygiene occurred in Germany. The movement for open-air schools began in Germany. Many of the best examples of experiment and accomplishment in the field of health education have occurred in the very country which today hurls fearful menace at the safety and freedom of the civilized world. We must learn, even from the fiendish success of despotic Germany, important lessons for the solution of vital problems which perplex democracy.

Hundreds of millions are being expended for hospitals, for supplies, for medical care of the soldiers in training, for our men who are wounded or in any way disabled in the service of the country; and the best that can be done in all of this program is never really enough. Institutions are being prepared for the convalescence of our splendid men who are shattered in hazardous service for all the rest of us. Wonderful and unprecedented plans are being made for the fullest possible reconstruction and rehabilitation of those who are injured in war. Plans are being most wisely made, under the revised requirements of the draft, for the removal and correction of the remediable physical defects of the men who are found to be below the standard of physical fitness. And all of this is as it should be. Too much cannot be done.

But what about the basic needs of the great draft army of the nation's children who must supply the human units of the citizenry of the next generation; who must bear the burden of civilization in peace and in war? What shall we do about the neglect of the children who hold the future of civilization in their immature lives?

Our country is suffering—not only in relation to the war but in the general program of the nation's advancement—annual economic loss amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, and human loss of value immeasurable, because the health, the biologic soundness, and welfare of the children are so largely neglected; because existing defects are not recognized and cured whenever possible; because the available forces are not mobilized to prevent diseases which might be avoided with intelligent and organized effort; because wisdom is not practically applied to the conservation and development of the most vital of all our nation's resources, the health of the people, and most important of all, the health of the children and youth. For, let it be said again, the foundations for enduring soundness of the nation must be laid in provisions secured for the health and welfare of the children.

Our schools are wasting enormous sums in educating, or trying to educate, the children who are handicapped by ill health, when the expenditure of much smaller amounts in a judicious health program would produce an extraordinary saving in economy and efficiency. A dollar spent promptly in a timely, constructive effort to conserve a child's health will be more fruitful, for the child and for human society than will a thousand dollars applied twenty years later. The principle of national thrift finds its first and most vital application in the conservation and improvement of the health of the children.

At least 1 per cent.—200,000—of the 22,000,000 school children in the United States are mentally defective.

Over 1 per cent., 250,000 at least, of the children are handicapped by organic heart disease.

At least 5 per cent.—1,000,000 children—have now, or have had, tuberculosis, a danger often to others as well as to themselves.

Five per cent.—1,000,000—of them have defective hearing, which, unrecognized, gives many the undeserved reputation of being mentally defective.

Twenty-five per cent.—5,000,000—of these school children have defective eyes. All but a small percentage of these can be corrected, and yet a majority of them have received no attention.

15 to 25 per cent.—3,000,000 to 5,000,000—of them are suffering from malnutrition, and poverty is not the most important cause of this serious barrier to healthy development.

From 15 to 25 per cent.—3,000,000 to 5,000,000—have adenoids, diseased tonsils, or other glandular defects.

From 10 to 20 per cent.—2,000,000 to 4,000,000—have weak foot arches, weak spines, or other joint defects.

From 50 to 75 per cent.—11,000,000 to 16,000,000—of our school children have defective teeth, and all defective teeth are more or less injurious to health. Some of these defective teeth are deadly menaces to their owners.

Seventy-five per cent.—16,000,000—of the school children of the United States have physical defects which are potentially or actually detrimental to health. Most of these defects are remediable.

One of the appalling revelations of recent years is the conclusion, based on unrefuted evidence, that the rural school children in this country are handicapped by more physical defects than the pupils in the city schools. While several significant causes seem to be responsible for this astounding condition, the present physical inferiority of country children depends in part upon the fact that city children now receive more health care than do those in rural regions.

Is it necessary to urge that in all of the school children of the country these health defects should be recognized, and that all of the defects which demand remediable attention should be promptly corrected? It is lamentably true that in only a small percentage of the entire school population are the defects studied and recognized, while in only a small fraction of these even are the detrimental defects corrected in an effective manner.

The business of keeping the school children of this country in good physical repair is, as now conducted, a disgrace to the nation. The great majority of people (many of them generally intelligent) fail to appreciate the significance of these defects. This fact, however, does not lessen in any way the injury to the children of the neglected health defects.

The real danger to the children of the land, as a matter of fact, lies in the ignorance, irresponsibility, and neglect of the adults supposed to be equal to the most important task of the adults of any species—namely, the care of the young.

The children of our country deserve as effective physical care as the live stock.

The children are entitled, even in war times, to as careful attention and cultivation as the crops.

Shall not the children, drafted by compulsory education into our schools, be assured of as skillful and satisfactory care as the soldiers in camp and trench?

If health and physical efficiency are then so important for the country as a whole, all of the necessary forces, both Governmental and voluntary, must be marshaled for the task of protecting and developing the physical fitness of the young.

The principle of universal training must, in a manner consonant with the spirit and methods of democracy, be interpreted and applied in the universal, compulsory health and physical care and training of all the children of the nation. Moreover, a comprehensive program of health training must provide for the education of adults, as well as of the children. The children will be the responsible adults of the next generation, but those now of adult age control largely the opportunities of the young in preparation for adult life.

While it is true that many agencies of influence and responsibility are requisite for a comprehensive national health program, still it is equally true that the consideration of any particular phase of this work must recognize the importance of co-operation with other agencies as clearly as the details of its own work.

In a nation with compulsory education and free schools the possibilities of a health education program are extraordinarily impressive. The acceptance of the rapidly widening social scope of education, in preparing the young for all the privileges and responsibilities of life, carries inevitably with it the opportunity and obligation that the school shall undertake the most important part in the entire continuous program of health education.

Much of the actual health care of the children must be accomplished by the home, by health boards, and by other organizations, both governmental and voluntary. However, the school in the United States is the universal, the officially credited, and the strategic agency to lead in the educational program of health, to standardize the principles involved, and to organize and supervise the social program for the care of the children's health.

A national program of health education adequate in any way to the essential needs of the situation must include the following items:

I. Health examination and supervision of the pupils' health with provision for the following phases:

(a) Daily inspection and regulation of attendance at school for the prevention and control of acute and contagious diseases. The children are compelled to attend school at an age when they are peculiarly susceptible to many forms of acute disease and physical defect. The school is, in its very nature, perfectly adapted to serve as an agency for assembling and distributing children's diseases throughout the community, and all too frequently this is just what occurs. The best knowledge and skill of preventive medicine and the efficient service and co-operation of all available forces—physicians, nurses, teachers, school officials, parents, and even the children themselves—are requisite for a reasonable minimizing of these diseases of child life. Every school vitally needs an efficient form of health supervision with medical direction; with the strikingly effective services of properly qualified school nurses; with the essential co-operation of well-trained teachers and of parents willing to do their share in promoting the welfare of all the children. The methods of controlling and preventing communicable diseases among school children will not be satisfactory until parents and guardians keep away from the school not only the children with "symptoms of recognized diagnosed disease," but the children with "signs of health disturbance."

(b) Provision for the general health of the pupils should include the following:

1. Health examination and dental inspection at least once a year, followed by notification and advice to the homes.

2. Follow-up health service by school and district nurses, with co-operation of home and all available organizations.

3. Provision for correction of all harmful, remediable defects by medical and surgical care and by dental and health clinics. Children handicapped by health defects cannot make the best use of the education offered to or forced upon them. Education which pretends to help prepare the children for life cannot logically neglect any element of vital concern in their development.

4. Warm school lunches for all pupils who do not eat warm lunches at home. Society should not pauperize any home or child, but society for its own welfare should prevent by every possible means malnutrition in growing children. The warm lunch is necessary to the health of every child. The school lunch, as an illustration of principles of nutrition and as an object lesson, is the most effective means of educating the school child, the home, and the community in better ways of selecting and using foods.

II.—A healthful school environment. The schoolhouse and surroundings should be sanitary and attractive. They should be healthful not only when built, but also in their maintenance and use. A model school fallen into neglect may be far less sanitary in health influence than a cheap, makeshift building well cared for. The schoolhouse should be as sanitary and healthful in all essential particulars as the best home in the community. Further, it should be pleasing and attractive in appearance, in furnishings, and in surroundings, so that the community as a whole may be proud of it; so that the pupils and teachers may receive pleasure in attending school and in caring for and improving it. Healthful and attractive schools are absolutely essential to the physical, mental, social, economic, and moral well-being of the children and teachers, and to the life and welfare of the nation as a whole. Such schools are powerful health agencies, serving as examples of sanitation to all who see them, and affecting healthfully pupils and teachers and all others who come within their influence.

III.—A hygienic school management which insures conditions in the highest attainable degree favorable and healthful; in methods and materials of instruction, arrangements of program, length of school day, forms of examinations and tests, methods of grading and promotion, arrangement and supervision of recesses, requirements of home study, and in personality and influence of teachers.

IV. Effective health training and teaching of pupils, which are dependent upon:

(a) Inculcation of health habits affecting the pupil individually and in relation to the home, school, community, and the State.

(b) Instruction in facts, principles, and motives which will provide the best basis for intelligent and effective action.

(c) Greater emphasis upon health than upon disease in the program of health teaching.

(d) Greater emphasis upon social than upon personal or individual aspects of hygiene.

(e) Education of children for responsible parenthood—dependent in part upon two factors:

1. That the teachers should be more comprehensively and thoroughly trained to understand all aspects in the lives of the developing children under their care.

2. That parents should be better prepared for their own part in the education and guidance of their own children.

V. Provision of an adequate and rational physical education with:

(a) Well-equipped playgrounds, athletic fields, gymnasiums, and utilization of all available outdoor facilities.

(b) Employment of teachers and supervisors qualified to give sensible and satisfactory guidance to the physical training activities.

(c) The acceptance of useful and healthful social service and vocational activities in the physical training program.

VI. Better preparation of teachers for health education. If advantage is to be taken of the opportunities offered, and if the responsibilities for health service are to be adequately met, the teacher must be thoroughly trained and equipped for the task. It is important that the teacher should be healthy—a helpful and inspiring example in this whole field of health influence—and intelligent and wise with reference to the wide program of education. The following factors of improvement seem advisable in relation to this problem:

(a) The teachers should be more carefully selected, partly with reference to health qualifications, and they should be more adequately trained, so that they may direct their own lives more efficiently and through their better knowledge of health laws fulfill more satisfactorily their obligations in the schools and in relation to their pupils, and to the communities in which they work.

(b) Society should provide more favorable conditions for the preservation of the teacher's health, and for the improved efficiency of the teacher's work.

The argument, then, for a national program of health education finds rational support in the present stage of social and educational development in the United States, and convincing emphasis for this proposal is projected from the present world crisis and from the lessons to be derived by our democracy from this struggle of civilization. To provide the essentials of administration for "A National Program of Health Education," I submit the following propositions:

I. That a comprehensive, thoroughgoing program of health education and physical education is absolutely needed for all boys and girls of elementary and secondary school age, both rural and urban, in every State in the Union.

II. That legislation, similar in purpose and scope to the provisions and requirements in the laws recently enacted in California and New York State and New Jersey, is desirable in every State, to provide authorization and support for State-wide programs in the health and physical education field.

III. That the United States Bureau of Education should be empowered by law, and provided with sufficient appropriations, to exert adequate influence and supervision in relation to a nation-wide program of instruction in health and physical education.

IV. That it seems most desirable that Congress should give recognition to this vital and neglected phase of education, with a bill and appropriation similar in purpose and scope to the Smith-Hughes law, to give sanction, leadership, and support to a national program of health and physical education, and to encourage, standardize, and, in part, finance the practical program of constructive work that should be undertaken in every State.

V. That Federal recognition, supervision, and support are urgently needed, as the effective means, under the Constitution, to secure that universal training of boys and girls in health and physical fitness, which are equally essential to efficiency of all citizens both in peace and in war.

The possibilities of vital accomplishment in a national program of health education seem not only fundamental for national safety, but limitless for national progress. The significance and necessity of the work to be done make the demand for constructive advancement imperative.

A French war correspondent said recently: "I wish you knew our French Lieutenant. He is one of the finest men I ever hope to know. He makes you feel that even more than the great cathedrals he should be guarded and protected—for France." And so I say to you: I wish you appreciated the children and youth of this republic. They make up, in possibilities, the finest generation of human beings the world has ever seen. They make you feel that, even more than the great museums and monuments; more than great industrial plants and ships; more than great skyscrapers and cathedrals, they should be guarded and protected; cultivated and developed; for America—for the world.

ONLY FOURTEEN NEUTRAL NATIONS

THE only countries still neutral are Spain, Holland, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, in Europe, and Argentina and Mexico and a few small republics, in the Western Hemisphere.

How long Spain will maintain her neutrality is a matter of much conjecture. Already German submarines have sunk Spanish ships in sufficient numbers to threaten the industries and commerce of the country. The sentiment at the court at Madrid is frankly pro-ally. Germany has, however, created a strong feeling in her favor, and it finds expression in anarchistic uprisings against the Government, backed by money from the Wilhelmstrasse. There has arisen recently a wave of revulsion against Germany. Only last month the United States made an agreement by which the armies of Pershing would receive a portion of their supplies from Spain, and in return Spain was to get cotton and other raw products from America.

The Netherlands, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden are undoubtedly maintaining neutrality largely through fear of Germany. The Netherlands Government is now greatly troubled for fear that Germany will make the taking of Dutch ships by America a pretext for a ruthless invasion of that country. Danish ships have been sunk, Danish soldiers killed, but Denmark has endured it all with little murmuring. The court is said to be pro-German. The people by very virtue of the losses inflicted upon them are pro-ally. For a time the sentiment in Sweden was frankly pro-German, but it is supposed to have veered. Norway is strong in pro-ally feeling, but naturally fearful of the Teuton.

Exposure of the German plot last September showed plainly that the diplomatic circles in Argentina were pro-German. The situation there is peculiar. The army officers and Government officials favor the cause of Germany; the people, on the other hand, are pro-ally. Time and again have efforts been made to introduce a declaration of war against Germany, but it has not gone through. Germany is deluging the country with propaganda. The people at the railroads are being incited to strikes to prevent the shipments of grain to the Allies. These strikes have, however, been traced, and if anything have increased the feeling of bitterness and anger against the Germans.

Mexico is neutral in so far as she has not declared her stand against any of the belligerents. It is well known that German money is being spent in the country, but the usual state of chaos in which the country habitually finds itself does not make its entrance into the war probable.

The other countries which have not yet broken with the Teutons are Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Venezuela.

Fourteen altogether—that is the number of nations which remain, at least in name, neutral.

His Wife's Fault.

"This man says you owe him money, Sam," said the Judge.

"Dat's right, Judge, I does."

"Well, why don't you pay him?"

"Why, I hain't got nothin' t' pay him wiv, Judge."

"Well, why haven't you?"

"To tell de hones' truf, Judge, s'pects my wife has felled down on da job!"—Yonkers Statesman.

"COPS OF THE SKY" SCRUTINIZE FLYERS

AERIAL police is another war development that promises usefulness for times of peace as well. The cops of the sky have been put on duty at some of the flying fields in Texas in order to prevent cadet aviators from visiting friends and otherwise loafing on their jobs when they are out alone on practice flights.

Near one of these fields is a pretty scattered suburban town which has rapidly filled up with the wives of cadets and officers. An interurban electric railway running past both town and field makes it possible for the husbands to come up from the field in the late afternoon and return early the next morning. When they were out flying during the day they made it convenient to come buzzing over the house where wifey was boarding, to her great delight and the interest of all the neighbors.

This soon led to a landing in a big open pasture near by and the particular wifey involved hurried out with a nice hot meal for her birdman. In a few days others found it convenient to land in the same field. The whole town was delighted to have the opportunity of doing something for Uncle Sam's boys, and whenever an aviator came down somebody would take him a cake or a pie or a hot meal, whether or not he had a wife living in the town.

Some cadets developed a tendency also to visit friends they had made at a distance from the field, perhaps staying the better part of a day with them. All this was most unmilitary and also it was wasting Uncle Sam's time and Uncle Sam's gasoline, so the commanding officer of the field came down hard on the cadets and forbade any landing unless forced by accident or necessity during absence on flight from the field.

To enforce the order several fliers go out from the field every day, circling the sky and watching for possible disobedience of the rule. Thus far this policing of the air has worked well. The plan offers many suggestions for the consideration of State constabulary forces.

MILITARY CRITIC ON THE NEW GERMAN OFFENSIVE

Terrific Attacks on the British North of Arras a Logical Outcome of Check Suffered by the Enemy in Attempt to Take Amiens

Messines and Vimy Ridges, British Key Positions, Foe's Main Objectives

By a Military Expert.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

ON Monday, April 8, the German cannon opened a devastating fire on the British lines between La Bassée Canal and Armentières. This was maintained for forty-eight hours, when early on Wednesday morning the German infantry went forward to the attack. The ground in this sector offers great difficulty both to the attack and the defense, with the advantage to the attack where it is sent forward regardless of losses to gain a given objective. It is low and flat, without a single feature of military value other than the streams by which it is penetrated.

On the south the position is flanked by the heights of Vimy Ridge and of Notre Dame de Lorette, which are really the object of all the fighting. On the north it is similarly flanked by the ridge which runs from Messines to Wytschaete, and to a lesser extent by the Passchendaele Ridge. It is to be noted in this fighting that if the Germans continue to push their lines westward, between La Bassée and Armentières they are confronted with exactly the same situation which now faces them in the Somme region. They will, in other words, have created a deep salient, the two ends of which are guarded by points which have always the possibility of great danger.

FIRST GERMAN GAINS.

In the first attack the Germans pushed the British lines back in the centre between the two towns mentioned, although at first both flanks held firmly. The British receded to the Lawe River, a branch of the Lys, and also along the southern bank of the Lys itself. Neuve Chapelle, interesting because it was the scene of the first British offensive in the early Spring of 1915, was taken and passed, and the line run back to Vieile Chapelle on the Lawe. From here the British line followed the Lawe up to its confluence with the Lys at Estaire, after which it followed the Lys.

The British flanks held out with unexpected strength. On the southern flank at Givenchy a heavy counterattack was launched, which captured nearly a thousand men and retook whatever of the ground had been lost at this point. This, however, only served to emphasize the fact that the German positions were only growing more dangerous as the line moved westward.

This was particularly true in the north, where the ridge position, rising out of the otherwise perfectly level ground, gave the British an overwhelming advantage in observation, and consequently in artillery fire. The German attack, then, of necessity as much as from choice, swung around to the north, striking once more at the famous Ypres sector. The effort was made to recreate the salient which had been destroyed as a result of the great mining operation of the early Summer of last year. On a front from Hollebeke to Armentières the Germans moved forward, regardless of loss, and established a line which extended generally along the road from Ploegsteert to Wytschaete, and thence to Hollebeke, passing through Messines. The town of Messines was, in fact, several times in German hands, but each time strong British attacks drove them back. The famous ridge remained in British hands, although it was held only through the heaviest sort of hand-to-hand fighting.

The new configuration of the battle line as a result of these changes drew a ring about Armentières which left it open to attack from three sides. The town, however, is of no value from a military standpoint at best. It is situated in the lowest part of a very low country, far down in the valley of the Lys and directly on the southern bank of the river itself. Before the attack the German lines were almost at its outskirts, so that whatever usefulness it might otherwise have had has long since been destroyed.

This general situation made any defense of Armentières not only of no avail, but a useless waste of men. Accordingly it was evacuated by the British without loss. In fact, the town was so filled with gas from German shells and gas cylinders that the Germans themselves could not enter it in time to cause any inconvenience to the British as they fell back. In the fighting which followed the capture of Armentières the Germans, who were of course already astride the Lys River, pushed their way along the river toward Estaire, their lines expanding northward as they advanced toward Steenwerck and Bailleul. Here, however, another trouble is met in the maze of hills north and northwest of a line through Bailleul and Neuve Eglise, and this group of hills will give the Germans more trouble than any other section they have yet found in the north.

BRITISH DEFENSE OF MESSINES.

The attacks against Messines Ridge up to the present writing, (Thursday night,) have proved an utter failure. The fighting has been of a character unequaled in intensity in this offensive. But at all points of the heights the British positions are absolutely securely held. The Germans have not taken Messines itself, and until the village falls, the ridge has not been touched. South of the ridge the German lines have gone forward. Were the character of the country different, the Messines Ridge might be turned. But with the British on the hills and the Germans in the level country below, there is little danger from this cause. The fighting here, however, is more vital to the allied cause than that at any other point, since if the British hold out the drive at Amiens is stopped and Vimy remains safe in British hands.

The close of the fighting that preceded the German attack on the British around Armentières and Messines found the Germans in a rather awkward position in their attempt to drive to the sea by way of the Somme Valley Along the Somme, they had been definitely, if not permanently, checked. North of the Somme, the British line stood fast first at Albert, where the Germans had made numerous expensive and fruitless efforts to force a crossing of the Ancre in strength; and later, at Arras, where similar attempts were made to break through the defenses which guard the eastern approach to the Vimy Ridge positions. At Bucquoy similar attempts in the southern path to Vimy Ridge had met a like fate.

South of the Somme, as far as the valley of the Luce River, some slight advances had been recorded, but the field was turned into a slaughter pen and the Germans found that the game was not worth the candle. The cost of each foot of gain was prohibitive. Only along the Avre were the Germans able to make any gain whatever. Here, about the village of Castel, which is the most western point reached in the German advance, the salient which originally had its apex at Montdidier drew down into almost a point, with its sides close together.

FOE FORCED TO WIDEN FRONT.

The result was that the front over which action was possible had become too limited for effective work. There was, in the first place, no room for troops to spread out. There was no possibility for the use of superior numbers which the Germans might be able to mass. The front was becoming congested to the point where there was no room to turn around. All approaches to the front—the highways, the railroads, such as they are—were becoming so loaded with materials of various kinds that there was not even sufficient means of approach for the transport of the necessary reserves. As for getting up heavy artillery, it was practically out of the question.

But there was a greater difficulty still. Germany had reached the point in her offensive where it was no longer possible to strike over a wide section of front. The fighting had narrowed down to a campaign for limited objectives one after the other; of small encircling operations which gradually threw loops around the points to be taken and so squeezed out the defenders. Even this could be done only by concealing the real point of attack by diversions elsewhere.

But on the narrow front to which the French and the British defense had limited the German attacks such concealment was impossible. The Germans if they attacked at all had to attack at certain points within a small scope, and the Allies knew where the attacks must come. Consequently they were always prepared for them. The chances of German victory then began to dwindle. The situation demanded other fields, a widening out of the possible front of attack by some means or other so that the army might have some space in which to manoeuvre. The fighting then during the last week has been limited to the search for this space. And if anything it has been more determined, more fiercely waged than was the opening fight before St. Quentin.

The first step in this process was the German attack against the French along the Oise in the angle where the new line, formed after the retreat, joins the old. This point was near the bend in the Oise southwest of La Fère, and just north of the lower forest of Coucy. The angle was an awkward one, acute in formation, and was really without any reason for existence. The Germans were well across the Oise at La Fère as matters stood, so that there was no question of the French forcing them back in order to flank them out of their positions on the southern bank. The scene of the fighting was far removed from the main fighting front and therefore bore no direct relation to the positions on the Avre where the Germans were held in check.

There are, therefore, but two possible reasons for this attack, both of which were well served. The Germans had commenced to think well of the offensive as they saw it going ahead. They saw the great promises of von Hindenburg about to be turned into facts; the glowing predictions of the press were about to come true. But suddenly there came a halt in the proceedings. Somewhere the great machine had gone wrong and the great von Hindenburg had been held up. He was to have been in Paris by the 1st of April, but instead his great army had been held up and seemed unable to get ahead. This was the situation which was faced in the field, and which, because of the great casualty lists that had been added through the offensive, demanded a solution.

The second consideration was that in order to work out a solution for the problem in the Somme district and enable the German Army to go ahead the deadlock which existed in the north, where the British still clung to Vimy Ridge and the Heights of Notre Dame de Lorette, must be broken. The attempts against the British right and the British centre had both failed. There remained the British left.

The attack against the French satisfied to a certain extent both conditions. It gave the Germans, at a time when it was much needed, another success on which they could dilate and about which they could boast. It made no difference that the success was purely local. It served its purpose of hiding the real situation in the west and the nature and extent of the check south of the Somme.

FRENCH MENACE TO GERMANS.

Its effect in a military way consisted entirely in furnishing a satisfactory diversion. The German plan has from the first been directed principally toward a defeat of the British. The French have been engaged in but a minor way, relatively, although their line has been extended considerably due to the creation of the huge salient at Montdidier. Only in so far as they have prevented the Germans from separating the two forces and from driving their way to the sea by way of the Avre River have the Germans directed their attacks toward them.

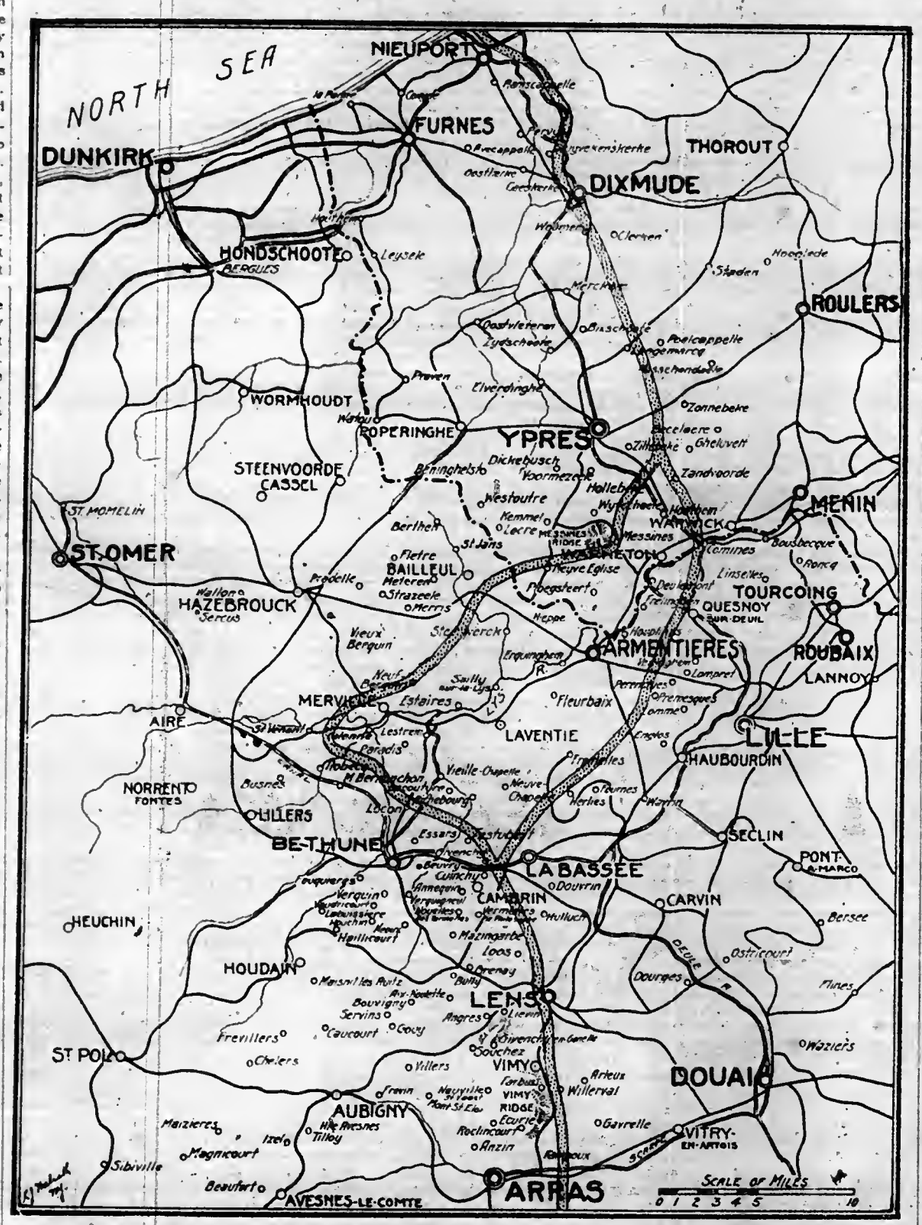
The French Army, therefore, is dangerous in its ability to concentrate and strike in some other quarter away from the battlefield. Its reserves have undoubtedly been gotten ready for movement for the purpose of reinforcing where need be. To prevent them from being sent to the parts of the line under attack, or from taking over more of the former British line than they at present hold, it is necessary that at least some demonstrations be made against them. Particularly is this true when a large attack is pending. Therefore, both to draw attention from the point of attack and at the same time to prevent reinforcements being drawn away from the French front, the Germans attacked along the Oise, as far removed from the real point of attack as possible, while at the same time giving the impression that the attack was still a part of the main battle.

FRENCH RETREAT LOGICAL.

The point selected for attack has already been mentioned as the sharp angle which was created by the stretching out of the French line to the west, in order to keep their contact with the British. The French at this point were not in very great strength. There was no reason why they should have been. This section of the front is not vital. The angle which they held was more of a detriment than a help. Consequently when the Germans struck it with two or three times the French strength the French were compelled to fall back.

Pressure was exerted both from the northern bank of the Oise and from the east, where the line turned southward. Forcing their way across the river, while at the same time pressing on the east, the Germans made the French positions untenable. To have attempted to hold them would not only have been futile. It would have been dangerous, exposing to capture all of the troops which held the salient, and would have caused a needless loss. The lower Forest of Coucy was given up, together with the small towns which lie along its western edge. Finally, after heavy fighting, the village of Chauny, practically all of which lies along the northern bank of the Oise, was vacated, although at last accounts the French are still close to its southern outskirts.

The French south of Chauny have fallen back to their logical position south of the Ailette, placing this little stream as a defensive barrier between them and the Germans. This position the French are maintaining, and apparently without further molestation from the Germans, although there has been a heavy artillery fire ever since the fighting in this sector started.



Attacking on a Front from Near La Bassee to the Vicinity of Ypres, the Germans Pressed the British Back to a Depth of About Ten Miles in Places, but Were Repulsed With Heavy Losses at Other Points. Their Main Objective Was the Strong Messines Ridge.

PAINTED LANDSCAPES AS RANGE FINDERS FOR GUNS

THE immense canvas that seems almost to fill the studio of the Jones brothers with its vista of far blue hills, red-roofed cottages, and a white road winding among poplar trees, does not mark a return to the panoramic in landscape painting. H. Bolton Jones, N. A., has not given up the painting of exquisite bits of landscape, to go back to the reproduction of great spaces of countryside. Francis Coates Jones, N. A., is a figure painter still, although he is at present occupied with another huge canvas, from which mountains and a church spire are just beginning to emerge into recognition on the opposite wall.

The brothers are giving practically all their time to big scenic effects these days, but it is not because they have adopted that style of art. These great canvases are not being done as mere paintings; they are targets, they serve not art, but the army. The Jones brothers are two of the large company of well-known painters who are making designation targets for range-finding and general observation work in our training camps. It is only a few weeks since the work was definitely organized by the Art War Relief, 663 Fifth Avenue, but already ninety-five paintings have been sent to the various training camps; there are twenty of the range-finding landscapes in use at Camp Upton alone.

When England first began to train its raw recruits for Kitchener's army, a surprising difficulty showed itself in the inability of the city lads to "see" the features of the country landscape. Asked to describe a scene, they talked vaguely of "a house" or "some trees"; which house, which trees, the details that would have identified, say, the approach of the enemy or his known hiding place, the town-bred boys literally did not see. They had to be trained in observation as completely as they had to be trained in shooting or bomb-throwing; they had to be trained for scouting, for ordinary observation work, and for all range finding with machine guns.

They had to be shown how to "keep their eyes open" in the country, and pictures were used to show them. But the other day an English Captain, looking at the range-finding pictures in the Jones brothers' studio, exclaimed, to the surprise of his hearers, "Oh, if we had had as good landscapes as that to start with, I think we could have got a million more Germans!" American landscape artists are working tirelessly to supply the perfect solution for the problem which was England's problem in the training of its "new armies," and which is ours now. They are painting great pictures of the French country, according to the needs of the United States Army in range-finding and observation work.

There are three specific requirements for the landscape paintings; they must have distance, they must contain objects of different kinds, shapes, and sizes, and they must be pictures of rolling country. Beyond that the demand is for variety. Francis Coates Jones and Bolton Jones work together on their landscapes, and they have already made fourteen; no two have been alike. Of the two large paintings, which were still in their studio a few days ago, one showed a wide river, winding through the picture, a village on a steep bluff in the distance, a house in the foreground half hidden by a clump of trees, some great boulders, and in the centre foreground a quarry.

Another was of a quiet rural scene, a few houses scattered here and there, several clumps of trees, a sloping hillside around which a road wound its way, and a little stream that rippled down from the far hills. One by Mr. and Mrs. V. V. Sewell, with a much shorter range, showed a wide road, a river, and in the background a château on a bluff, and on the flats by the water below it a factory. Naturally, the paintings must all be real landscape work; as F. C. Jones pointed out, poster things and cubist efforts are alike useless. Furthermore, the pictures must be good; they must really look like the land that the soldiers will fight over in France.

The movement that has now crystallized in the organized work of the Art War Relief really began at Plattsburg last Summer, when Captain Robert Aitken, the sculptor, found himself in need of a picture to assist his machine gun work, and made one. Then this Fall a Captain at Camp Dix asked Miss E. Mabel Clark, a painter, if she could make him a landscape for a like purpose. She was out of town, but she telephoned to Edward M. Ashe, who made the painting, and then took the Captain's general request to Miss Florence Waterbury, who introduced it as a suggestion to Mrs. Ripley Hitchcock, Chairman of the Art War Relief. Mrs. Hitchcock turned the details over to Mrs. H. Van Buren Magonigle, who has acted ever since as head of the committee that has the matter in charge, and under whose leadership the ninety-five paintings have already been sent to the camps. It was in February that Mrs. Magonigle undertook the work, and her first suggestion was one that she has carried out ever since. "It is a fine idea," said Mrs. Magonigle. "Let us get the best men we can find to do the pictures for us."

The Jones brothers hold the record for the largest achievement. Bolton Jones has devoted his entire working time to range-finding landscapes since the idea was first broached. Next to their fourteen comes Harry Hoffman, with ten paintings. Miss Clark and Mr. Ashe have also a number of paintings to their credit. Among the other artists who are constantly contributing to the work are Colin Campbell Cooper, N. A.; Miss Florence Lundborg, Chauncey Ryder, A. N. A.; William H. Lippincott, N. A.; Henry B. Snell, N. A.; Mr. and Mrs. V. V. Sewell, William Robinson, N. A.; Henry Prellwitz, N. A.; Mrs. Jules Turcas, Orlando P. Rouland, and Howard Russell Butler, A. N. A. In addition to the twenty paintings sent to Camp Upton, the Art War Relief has sent pictures to Camp Dix, Camp Meade, Camp Lee, Camp Devens, Camp Lewis, Camp Doniphan, Camp Wadsworth, Camp McClellan, and the 7th Regiment Armory here. The Saimagundi Club has taken up the matter officially, and is co-operating with the Art War Relief, but the latter organization attends to the distribution and transportation of all the pictures.

The landscapes are used at the training camps in range finding, which includes mechanical problems and the expert observation known as "indication" and "recognition," and in work with tactical problems in the highest stages of machine-gun instruction. They are also useful in general observation work. The first training in machine-gun work does not need pictures, or even cards; it is concerned with the gun itself; but as soon as the gunner learns the mastery of his gun he begins, first, with a big card target, and later with a landscape painting, to work on range finding.

And along with the mechanical problems of "tap traverse," "vertical search," and the like, the soldier must learn "indication" and "recognition"; he must learn how to tell where a thing is and how to understand its location when some one else tells it to him; and that is not so easy as it sounds. As one Captain said, "The average city boy must not only learn to use his eyes as he never used them before; he has got to get a whole new vocabulary!"

In this, the soldiers are trained with the pictures. They must describe what they see; observation and memory must be really educated. In "indication" they are taught from the landscapes to answer the question, "If you were to give your gunners the order to fire on a certain place, how would you word the command?" In "recognition" the "question" is after some such form as, "The enemy gun is behind the tree to the left of the mill; fire at it." They must learn quickly to describe a place, as quickly to recognize a place from another's description. As F. C. Jones pointed out, "It takes the average city boy ten minutes to indicate a point or give a report that ought to be spoken in the quickest possible time that the words can be said." The purpose which the big paintings help the army officers to attain is to train the men to get at any given object quickly and accurately.

They must do this with their minds. That is the first thing in which the paintings do such good service. To quote one officer, "It is not always—it is almost never—practicable in army instruction to take men over varied country or to encounter the many diverse problems of field work. We can work with a picture and train the men in indication and recognition with something like the actual diversity of field work."

Then they must do the same thing—get at objects accurately, and quickly—with their guns. They do not actually fire at the "designation targets." They use them to get the range of the guns. They work out the problems of traversing and searching, they learn to use the army field glasses and to master the formulae of the different scales. In learning the "tap traverse," for example, the men are first trained with a large card at twenty-five yards, across which numbered dots are horizontally placed. The order is given, "Tap, number two to number seven, left to right:" The dots are four inches apart; each number must take two taps. The men start their "traverse," and the officer halts a gun whenever he wants to get the accuracy of the man's tap.

The next step leaves the card and uses the picture: "Tap, red-roofed cottage by stream to clump of trees near rocks!" The lesson is more difficult now. By the time the gunner has mastered it he understands how much strength is needed for his "tap," he is becoming accustomed to range finding, his work is becoming automatic. He is on a fair way to meet those three demands of machine-gun firing—speed, accuracy, no waste.

The machine gun, as officers point out, is the "weapon of opportunity"; a man must never fire until he can do the most damage in the shortest time; he must know just where his shots will land; he must keep his own gun concealed, and he must find the enemy's gun in its concealment—and he must do all the work he can before the enemy finds his hiding place and gets his range.

Various mechanical problems of range-finding use the landscape paintings as "designation targets." They are also used in teaching men the measurement of distance by the fingers, and are valuable in the presentation of numerous difficult problems of tactics.

The artists have entered heartily into the work of supplying pictures. "In the first place, it is something we can do," said Francis Coates Jones. "We are too old to go to war, and although we have tried to do what we could in various ways we are very glad indeed to have this definite activity as a need for us to meet. American officers ask for more, and more, and British and French officers have told us that the pictures being made by the artists here are especially good and exceedingly useful.

"And it is great fun to do. It is like a new kind of art—going back to the old school of big landscapes, which is old enough now to be a novelty. We design them out together—my brother at one end and I at another. It doesn't take long—we have done fourteen in nine weeks. And anything that may make our soldiers better marksmen against the enemy is certainly worth doing."

EAST SIDE FULLY AWAKE TO MEANING OF THE WAR

THE spirit of the east side is at last thoroughly awake and alive to all that the war means. Recent events in Russia and the practical dropping of the mask of his designs by the Hun have been powerful influences which have contributed to the east side's awakening.

There is no sloth there. Those in charge of the Third Liberty Loan drive on the east side state now confidently that the great district will return ten times the total of its subscription of the second loan. For the east side is determined not only to back up its sons who are in the trenches in France, but the sons of every other mother of the land.

Headquarters for the heart of the east side have been established in the Bank of United States, 77 Delancey Street, where Bernaid K. Marcus, Vice Chairman of the Metropolitan Canvass Committee, and Max Pine, Secretary-Treasurer of the United Hebrew Trades, have their headquarters in charge of the work there.

Mr. Marcus, who is Vice President of the Bank of United States, has established Liberty Loan Clubs in the bank, where bonds may be purchased on the partial payment plan.

"We were greatly disheartened at the showing made by the east side during the two other drives last year," said Mr. Marcus yesterday, "but we now know that the great heart of the district has changed and that there is a new spirit here.

"You see many of the people who have come to this country, settled down on the east side, and prospered, have come from lands where they were oppressed by Governments. The position of the Jew in Central Europe is not a happy one, and under the Old Russia he was strictly restricted in employment and place of residence, not being allowed to live outside of certain provinces without special permission from the Russian Government.

"So when he came to America he hoped that the Government would leave him in peace. He found here a free country in which he and his wife were able to get ahead if they had diligence and frugality. His sons and daughters grew up and he felt that he was in the land of his dreams.

"Then came the events which led to America's entry into the war. To many a father of a family on the east side and many a mother, the alliance of England, France, Russia, and the United States meant that the United States was fighting in behalf of Russia, which had oppressed him and from which he had suffered great hardship to escape to another land. The old fear of oppression by a Government was revived.

"He felt that he had been deceived and tricked, and that liberty after all was a mere shadow. He foresaw dreadful things in the future of his adopted land.

"Then came the revolution in Russia. Russia became free—that is, free to determine her own destiny if she were let alone. It began to appear that the allied powers were against the new Russia since she had deserted their cause and had rid herself of her old absolutism.

"Then finally Germany let fall the mask. She plainly showed that she was bent on a conquest of the east, that Russia would be gobbled by Germany as rapidly as she was able to gobble. Germany also plainly showed that she meant the conquest of the world.

"The east side saw the light at once. The man and woman of the east side love freedom, and had encountered many perils in coming from the Old World to find freedom here. They were willing to fight for freedom and to buy Liberty bonds to insure freedom—only they had not wanted to fight against freedom, the freedom of Russia—nor had they wanted to fight with those who were in alliance with despotic Russia.

"So the east side will turn out a record subscription this year. To the Second Liberty Loan of last year this district subscribed only $250,000. We see in sight now nearly ten times that amount, or $2,310,000. And this comes from the trades and the work of the schools. This estimate does not include what we shall get from the business men of the east side and from the house-to-house canvass a little later.

"The United Hebrew Trades under the direction of Max Pine have been doing splendid work. One indication of the way in which the spirit of the east side has been changed is in the subscriptions which are being made by the various labor unions which are united under the United Hebrew Trades. Organization after organization has come forward and used treasury funds of the organization for the purchase of Liberty bonds. Each of the organizations is using all of its spare cash for bonds. In some cases the subscriptions range as high as $7,000. This is a new practice on the east side and is due to the patriotic work of Mr. Pine and his associates.

"We are doing a great deal of work in the schools. The boy pupils will carry circulars in Jewish to many homes. There are to be many entertainments in the schools of the district. The pupils will give away tickets to the residents of the district.

"The entertainments will be of unusual attractiveness. The programs will be literary and oratorical as well as musical in character. After the audiences have been entertained, our bond salesmen and experts will explain clearly the purpose of the Third Liberty Loan, in the languages of the district and also in Jewish. Opportunity will be afforded to all to subscribe.

"We do not wish to make any estimates here which in the face of later returns would look foolish. The estimate we have given out, however, does not include any returns from the business men of the east side or from the house-to-house canvass, as I have said, but these activities will come later. The east side is a peculiar district in many ways. It required a long time for the awakening to come. There must be still considerable educational work and much studying of financial domestic problems. So we are not quite ready to begin the house-to-house canvass. When we have focused attention upon the whole matter in every conceivable way then the time will be ripe for the canvassing. It is only in this way that results can be obtained on the east side.

The bank of the United States is now a stronghold for the Liberty Loan drive on the east side. At any hour of the day there are conferences, meetings of workers and school teachers, and also the most important activity, the taking of subscriptions to the Liberty bonds of the third issue.

OUR FIRST YEAR IN THE WAR

America's Contribution in Man Power—How the Vast Forces Needed Were Provided—Retrospect of Some Phases of Our Experience in Earlier Wars.

By FRANCIS VINTON GREENE.

WHEN the President carried us into war by his address of April 2, the worth of which was acknowledged not only by his admirers, but by those who had previously been his most bitter critics, the question immediately arose what part we should take in the war. That we should spend money without stint, in continuing to feed and munition the nations who were fighting Germany and, moreover, that we should lend them or give them huge blocks of what was called our unlimited credit, was the opinion of every one. The man who in the civil war sent all his wife's relatives to the front "had nothing on" the financial patriot of 1917; and many earnest people, sympathetic with the Allies and enthusiastic admirers of the heroism of France, seriously argued that we should not attempt to do anything more.

We had no army and no ships to transport it if we had one; there was nothing for our navy to do because the German Navy was bottled up in Kiel; it would take a year, so the military experts in Washington said, before we could train Bryan's million men, (who would spring to service, the arms being lacking,) so as to qualify them for fighting in this novel and horrible trench warfare; the war would surely be over, so it was thought, long before that, so why waste our time on a foolish effort to send soldiers? Why not concentrate on the business end and help those poor people over there who had suffered so much and had such need of our help? We could not help them by sending soldiers, because we did not have the soldiers, and could not train them in time; but we could and would let them have all the money they asked for.

Those who held this view were at one end of the line, and at the other end stood Theodore Roosevelt and the hundreds of thousands of enthusiastic followers, who, whatever he may think or say or do, will follow his lead so long as he has breath in his body. These argued in favor of calling for volunteers, as we had called for them in every previous war, and selecting from them 50,000, or even 100,000, of the most fit; of rushing them into camps, giving their leader prior claim against all others in the matter of equipment and supplies, drilling them every day and as long as there was daylight, and after a few weeks sending them across and into the trenches, with their leader in chief command or in such subordinate position as the President might place him in, under some West Point graduate as his commander. The 1st Regiment, U. S. Volunteer Cavalry, had been raised, equipped, trained, and transported a thousand miles by sea, and had fought in two desperate engagements under the most trying climatic conditions and forced the enemy to surrender all within sixty days. If it could be done in 1898, why not in 1917?

There were others who urged that our well-trained regulars and our partly trained National Guards should be assembled jointly, say one regiment of regulars and two of militia to a brigade; that a division of two such brigades should be ordered forthwith to France, as the State troops had been sent to the Mexican border in the preceding Summer; that the training camps should be in France within sound of the guns, and that as soon as the men had become accustomed to the atmosphere of actual war they should be sent into battle or into the trenches to await battle, their places in the training camp to be taken by another division assembled meanwhile and sent across in the same manner. And thus—so it was argued—a continuous flow of soldiers, in constantly increasing volume, analogous to the successive lines of skirmishers advancing across "No Man's Land," would be moving to France, where after a few months there would be a continuous movement of trained Americans from camp to trench.

But those who argued thus "could not catch the Speaker's eye." The general public did not see them and their views received little if any consideration. Those who advocated the glorified Rough Rider idea had no trouble in getting the floor, but the general opinion was that, while this idea had played its part, and a very useful part, when we were fighting a feeble foe, it was out of date in this terrible struggle with the most powerful and highly trained enemy that has ever come forth from the womb of time. Most people were satisfied that the President was well advised in rejecting it.

The General Staff then saw their chance to deal a death blow to the volunteer system, which, although we had won four wars with it and come out even in the fifth, they had violently attacked; and they had attacked it wisely, for it was an anachronism under existing conditions. The President, who had forbidden all preparedness, or even discussion of it, by military or naval officers, and who had expressed the hope that anything so foreign to our ideals as military conscription would never be necessary, was won over. He went to Congress and asked for a Draft act, and the Congress, after a long and bitter debate, granted it. Our military policy, or lack of it, which had served us for 142 years, went into the discard. The registration of all men between 21 and 31 years of age was ordered; and 10,000,000 men responded, not only without resistance or disturbance, which many had feared, but with no little enthusiasm. It was, like the dropping of the millions of ballots by which great issues are decided on Election Day, an impressive event.

The new system having been decided in principle, the next question was the organization, training, and command of the first million or more of men called to the colors. The organization adopted was that in use in the armies contending in France. A regiment, instead of consisting of the time-honored 1,000 men and ten companies of 100 each—or of the more recent 1,200 men, with three battalions of four companies, each of 100 men, or of the supposedly up-to-date 1,800 men, including the three battalions of infantry, a machine-gun company, a headquarters company, and a supply company—was now to number 3,600 men. The increase was due to the change in the size of the infantry companies from 100 to 250 men. Of the advantages and disadvantages of these large companies it would be too technical and too complicated to speak here. It is sufficient to say that these large companies have been adopted by our allies as well as our enemies, and obviously they had to be adopted in our regiments. It caused terrible heartburnings in the National Guard, where regiments with all the traditions of more than 100 years of honorable service have lost their identity and been wiped out. There is no surer way to injure the morale of a fighting force or cause unnecessary heartburnings than to destroy its traditions. It speaks well for the discipline of the old militia regiments, (of whose discipline the regular officers in charge of the Militia Bureau have spoken with none too great sympathy or tact,) that the change was carried out with comparatively so little friction or delay.

As to the national army, formed from the drafted men, of course no such difficulty arose, and it is perhaps due to this that the surprising but apparently certain fact has developed that the national army divisions are at the present moment superior in efficiency—i. e., in drill, discipline, morale, pride of organization, and enthusiasm—to the National Guard divisions which had had not only years and generations of armory and Sumner camp experience, but also of field manoeuvres, like those at Manassas and Massachusetts in recent years. The regular army has been expanded to three times its previous size by the simple process of making three regiments out of one regiment, three battalions out of one battalion, and three companies out of one company; while the machine gun, headquarters, and supply companies have been formed from raw recruits. As to the morale, instruction, and fitness of the regular army, little or nothing has been printed in the newspapers, and the location even of its camps is not publicly known, except possibly as to one of them.

Our army is officially divided, like Caesar's Gaul, into three parts—regular army, National Guard, and national army. This arbitrary distinction is protected by an elaborate system of numbering and nomenclature, by different insignia on the uniforms, and by different initials used in official correspondence and orders. These differences and distinctions have become an absurdity, which cannot too soon be done away with. The national army is as good or better in military essentials than the National Guard, and the regular army has been so diluted—one old soldier to five recruits and one West Point graduate to eight civilians—that it cannot possibly have any such superiority in military efficiency as it has had in all our previous wars.

There is practically no difference between the three component parts of our army. We are—or should be—one people with one purpose in this war, and we need, (and, as a matter of fact, we have,) only one army. The abandonment of these distinctions, which originally were perhaps justified, but now have become ridiculous, would add materially to the tone and good-feeling of all the men in uniform.

After organization comes training. The method adopted was to construct, at great expense, eighteen gigantic cantonments—wooden barracks, hospitals, storehouses and offices, ample water supply, modern sanitary plumbing and steam heat, a proper system of drainage and sewerage, good roads, Young Men's Christian Association and Knights of Columbus clubhouses, Post Offices, "hostess houses," dancing halls, baseball fields, and "movie" palaces. Each of these cities has a population of 30,000 and upward, with twenty-five miles or more of roads. Many of them are favored with a daily newspaper, (in some cases, I believe, morning and evening editions,) edited, put together, printed, circulated, and managed by men in khaki. If the citizens of these mushroom cities have not "all the comforts of home," it is hard to discover what has been left out. To a poilu or a boche, in lands where money does not grow on trees, the whole scheme must seem like a fairy tale.

In these cantonments the anaemic clerk, the lout from the farm, the "fresh kid" from the pavement, have been transformed in an almost incredibly short space of time into smart and well-set-up soldiers, with a knowledge of squad, company, and battalion drill, of digging trenches, of rushing over obstacles, and of jabbing a straw-made Hun with the bayonet. They have good clothes, excellent food, regulated lives, healthy exercise, small but certain pay, and a healthy but not sloppy appreciation of their high privilege as saviors of civilization. To one whose knowledge of reviews begins with that of Grant's and Sherman's armies on Pennsylvania Avenue at the close of the civil war and who has since seen more of them than he can remember, at home and abroad, in great capitals and on battlefields where the battle was followed by a review of the victorious army, where the trenches used for graves were near the reviewing stand, and a few overlooked and unburied naked dead had to be stepped over as the troops marched past—to such a one it seems as if no previous review or parade had been more impressive or effective than that of the Camp Upton division as it marched down Fifth Avenue in a blinding snowstorm a few weeks ago. The surroundings, physical, mental, and psychological, of the cantonments in which these men have received their training have little resemblance to the trenches or rest villages which await them "over there." For the regulars and guardsmen who already had had their elementary military training, the cantonment training has been a failure. These should have been trained in France, in the atmosphere of war. The National Guard has gone stale in nearly if not quite all of the camps; but for the national army, taking the rawest of raw recruits and licking them into shape in extra quick time, the cantonment system has been a phenomenal success.

Who is to command these upstanding lads with eager faces, and lead them to victory? The cantonment cities have been commanded by Major Generals, some of whom have held that rank for a dozen or more years, and some of whom were Lieutenant Colonels a few months before we entered the war. All have been treated on an equality, all subjected to the same democratic autocracy, the theory being that in the competition during the training period it would become evident who were the most competent, and to them would be assigned the commands when the divisions were ready to sail for France. As to this program, no serious objection can be raised. The army has contended with success for nearly one hundred years that there shall be no promotion in time of peace except by seniority. By appealing to Senators and Congressmen to defeat the plan that one-third of the promotions be made by selection, according to fitness and merit, under most carefully framed regulations to prevent favoritism, the officers of the army have made it impossible for the President and Secretary of War and the public at large to form any idea in time of peace of the relative merits and fitness for command of the officers in the army. When Elihu Root came to the War Department in 1899 he advocated, in his first annual report, a carefully planned method for a limited number of promotions by selection instead of by seniority. The officers of the army jumped on it as one man. The Senate and House of Representatives gave it no consideration, and Mr. Root never again referred to it, knowing that any such reference would be useless.

When war comes, however, all the foolish talk about the "vested rights" of officers of the army is lost in the atmosphere of serious things, and officers are selected for high commands according to the opinion of the President and Secretary of War as to their fitness for exercising their commands. In that way, when the first small division of regulars was sent abroad, in response to that pathetic appeal which Marshal Joffre so skillfully used in order to overrule the thoroughly bad plan which the General Staff had for sending no troops to France in less than a year—i. e., until this present date—the officer selected to command this division was a Brigadier General, who for this purpose was immediately advanced to the rank of Major General—John J. Pershing. He was known in the army as a man who, entering West Point at an age older than usual, had at once established his reputation as a man of determination and strong will. While, like General Sheridan and some others in our past history, he made no great reputation as a scholar, he held in each of the succeeding four years the highest cadet rank attainable. He was of suitable age, about 55 years, had passed his life fighting Indians or Mexicans, was "as hard as nails," and had had the experience of commanding a brigade of four or five regiments in the invasion of Mexico in 1916, whereas the Chief of Staff and the Assistant Chief of Staff—who had advocated and insisted upon, and but for Marshal Joffre would have carried out, the terrible scheme of not sending any American soldiers abroad until April, 1918—had neither of them commanded a brigade either in war or peace, except during five days of manoeuvres in Massachusetts some years ago.

Whether General Pershing has the qualifications for commanding an army of 2,000,000 men, the qualifications of Grant or Lee, remains to be seen. He must take his chances and abide by the result, and probably he would not have it otherwise. He did, however, show on his arrival in France that he had a cool head, under circumstances of extraordinary delicacy, difficulty and importance, and when he received such an ovation as no American ever before received abroad, he kept cool, responded to eulogistic addresses in a few well-chosen words, seldom exceeding 200 in number, and, in short, "did not slop over," as did certain "heroes" in our little war with Spain.

In connection with this question of high command it may not be out of place to refer to certain historical precedents. In 1775 John Adams, who, in connection with Samuel Adams, had done most to bring on the Revolution, proposed in the Continental Congress in Philadelphia that George Washington, Esq., of Virginia, should be appointed Commander in Chief of the armies of the United States. There is reason to believe that the underlying motive in Adams's action was to secure the support of public opinion in his political plans.

The appointment was made by unanimous consent, and in the middle of June, 1775, Washington mounted his horse and began his ride toward Cambridge and fame. He was escorted through the streets of Philadelphia with all the bravery of militia and military bands which Philadelphia could muster. From behind the window in the upper story of his boarding house John Adams watched him ride by. He then sat down and began his daily letter to his wife, in which occurred these words: "Others have reaped where I have sown; others will wear the laurels which belong to me." His prophetic soul saw with absolute vision that if the Revolution ended successfully the great man would be neither John Adams nor Samuel Adams, but that stalwart and competent soldier who was starting out on his horse.

After the war of 1812 all the politicians—Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams—set out to down Andrew Jackson. The only result was to land him in the White House with greater political power than any man had exercised since Washington.

When the Mexican war broke out, William L. Marcy and the Albany Regency were very wary of creating out of the war a soldier-President. Scott was then the senior Major General, with headquarters in Washington, and they left him there cooling his heels, in spite of his frantic appeals for a command, while they picked out a Colonel, Zachary Taylor, and sent him to the Rio Grande to open the war and enable Congress a little later to pass a resolution that a state of war existed in consequence of the acts of Mexico. Taylor, however, began to earn military laurels too rapidly. At Resaca and Palo Alto he drove the enemy back in spite of inferiority in numbers, and promptly pursued him into the heart of Mexico.

Then the people in Washington thought they would play Scott against Taylor, and they took away all Taylor's best troops and put them under the command of Scott, leaving Taylor only the militia or volunteer regiments to fight the battle of Monterey, which, nevertheless, he won. His best regulars were brought back to Corpus Christi and added to some volunteer regiments freshly raised; then they were sent under the command of Scott to Vera Cruz. Those at Washington probably thought that Scott would wear himself out in the fever-stricken marshes surrounding the walls of Vera Cruz. They probably imagined that under no circumstances would he be able to climb over the mountains separating him from the enemy's capital. But Scott not only took Vera Cruz in less than the twenty-seven days allowed by the standard works on military engineering for a successful siege, but in a campaign which General Sherman more than once described to me as the most brilliant in our history, and notwithstanding its small size one of the most brilliant in all history, he scaled the mountain passes, defeated his enemy in every one of seven battles, and dictated the terms of capitulation in the City of Mexico.

It was out of the question that he should be allowed to enjoy the military, and possibly the political, prestige due to such a campaign; so one of his volunteer brigadiers was egged on to insubordination, for which Scott promptly and sharply called him to account. The result was a court-martial, not for the brigadier, but for Scott himself, who was tried by his juniors in rank in a trial which began in sight of his conquered enemy and collapsed, by reason of a total lack of evidence, in the City of Frederick, Md., about three years later. But these machinations resulted in nothing but a proof of the depths to which petty political spite and meanness could descend. They did succeed in keeping Scott out of the White House, but placed there his junior in command, Taylor, and a few years later an inconspicuous brigadier whose name has been forgotten by all except historical students, one Franklin Pierce of New Hampshire.

In the civil war the great soul of Abraham Lincoln rose above such petty meanness. It was not so, however, with the politicians who surrounded him. Seward, Chase, Stanton, and that picturesque newspaper editor from Connecticut who never went to bed without putting on paper his thoughts of the day, to which we are indebted for the diary that is more interesting than any since Pepys. All of these schemed and plotted, and the advice they gave Lincoln on military affairs was always influenced by the possible political results.

What did it all amount to? The greatest soldier of the war went to the White House for eight years. The next greatest, Sherman, would unquestionably have succeeded him but for his categorical and emphatic statement that he would not be a candidate; that if nominated he would not run, and that if elected in spite of his opposition he would not serve. In his place we had Hayes, followed by Garfield, and then Harrison, politicians all, but every one of them owing his selection for the high office to the fact that he had been more or less successful soldiers in the civil war.

In the little war with Spain the senior Major General, Miles, was kept in Washington. Alger saw to it, doubtless with McKinley's approval, that he should hold no high position from which he might emerge as a formidable candidate in the campaign of 1900. A friend of Alger, a good enough soldier, by the way, but known to have the same opinions about politics as Sherman, was selected to lead the troops to Santiago. All that Miles could get was the command of a little expedition to Porto Rico, which was halted by the protocol of peace. But that did not prevent the country from having a soldier-President for seven years, namely, Theodore Roosevelt.

At the end of the term for which he had been elected Vice President he made a most brilliant and successful campaign in his own name for the Presidency. He essayed a third term without success in 1912, and many men, myself included, think that it would have been fortunate for this country if he had been nominated and elected in 1916. We would be glad to see him elected President in 1920, should the war last that long, as it well may. But he, as well as his rival, who is now in the White House, is a profound student of American history, and it might be well for them to ponder our history in the light of current events and see if they can find any case where we have elected as President after a war a man who had not taken an active part on the firing line during the war.

In my humble judgment, submitted with the utmost respect, the next President of the United States is now commanding a battalion or a regiment in France.

HUDSON SUPER SIX

This Year A New Super-Six

A Car Which 50,000 Hudson Users Helped To Design

Perfection comes only through development.

We haven't yet attained the ideal in motor car building, but what 50,000 owners have experienced and taught Hudson engineers has had tremendous influence over the new Super-Six.

Those who bought cars of the earlier production did so because of what they knew of the Hudson Company and what the cars had shown in tests.

No other cars appealed to them so strongly in such vital particulars as endurance, power and speed.

How well the Super-Six made good is known to all motordom.

But what is not yet so apparent is the utter refinement that has taken place in the Super-Six. It came from what the Hudson engineers learned from owners and as a result of the tests made on speedways, in road races and mountain climbs.

Such development will seem strange to all who know the earlier Super-Sixes. Without having seen the new Super-Six it will be impossible for many to understand how much improvement could have been possible.

Nevertheless, there is a marked fineness about this new series that is the result of what previous models taught.

The improvement is not limited to the chassis. Hudson engineers worked to produce a well-proportioned, well-balanced car.

No detail stands out in distinction against other parts. It is not because of its exclusive and famed motor alone that it leads. No special equipment in itself calls for unusual consideration in this new Super-Six. Even in the question of bodies, except as to their special fitness for various uses, there is no one feature upon which to place particular emphasis.

But we do point with pardonable pride to the car as a whole. It does have a wonderful and powerful motor, but so also is every other unit of its chassis just as well designed and just as well suited to do the work for which it is intended.

And that same well-rounded, complete detail applies also to the bodies, of which there are ten different types. They are beautifully designed, rigidly built and handsomely finished. There is not a single note of disproportionate excellence or of unequal quality in any detail of the new Super-Six.

The experienced eye can appreciate much that has been done to make this new car a finer Super-Six. But when performance is contrasted against that of the earlier models, then only time and long, hard usage will reveal the improvement.

MOTOR TRUCK USE ON STATE ROADS

Commissioner Preparing to Meet Problems of Heavy Loads—$1,000,000 For Army Road Repairs.

By EDWIN DUFFEY,
New York State Commissioner of Highways.

Through a misunderstanding it was recently stated that the highways of the State would be closed to army truck service. There was no foundation for such statement. Many months ago the Attorney General of this State rendered an opinion addressed to the Secretary of State, who has charge of the licensing of automobiles, which opinion was also duly brought to the attention of the Highway Department. He advised that all army truck and automobile service should, under the Federal and the State laws, be accorded the full and free use of all highways in the State, and its other facilities as its needs might require. He also advised that it was not necessary that any such army vehicle should procure license plates.

All army service of every kind is legally entitled to the free use of the public highways. The standard army motor truck, sometimes called the Liberty truck, is built in two or three sizes, the maximum size being the five-ton truck. This was considered by the engineers as the largest truck needed for army purposes, and I am informed that there is no intention of building a truck of larger capacity.

The army truck has done considerable damage, especially during the time that the frost was leaving the ground. This damage was expected and discussed with representatives of the Government when they came here last January with the object of making general plans for the service this year. The Federal authorities undertook to lessen as far as possible the service during a brief period in the Spring when the roads were in a most vulnerable condition, and they have endeavored as far as possible to comply.

The damage to the roads was by no means confined to that caused by the army motor truck. In many cases serious damage was caused by trucks of much greater capacity. Any attempt to restrict has partly had in mind the saving of the roads not only for our State service, but also that they might be left in as good condition as possible for the army truck service, which is expected to increase rapidly as the season progresses.

Without entering into the extensive subject of what our roads are capable of sustaining in the way of loads, I would say that nearly all of the main route in use by the Government between Buffalo and New York is composed of the oldest roads built in this State, and, of course, built in the main before the motor truck appeared. It is well understood by the Federal authorities and by this department that the necessary army service would be a severe test to these old roads. We both realize that the service is essential and has to be maintained, and our joint plans and arrangements have all been toward such maintenance. Arrangements, therefore, have been taking shape since January. The department was consulted as to the most desirable routes to be followed, and the routes suggested by the department have been the ones used. The plans made some weeks ago contemplated an alteration later in the season of the routes in order that some of the trucks could go out of our State at the Pennsylvania line, and thus be headed for their objective points south of New York without the necessity of going the roundabout way via Albany. These alterations await the drying up of the ordinary unimproved roads in both States after the Spring season.

In order that the main routes to be used by the Government should, as far as possible, be kept in good condition regardless of injury, this department, after consultation with the Federal authorities, laid before the Legislature several weeks ago a proposal for an extraordinary appropriation which should be used in emergencies for the rapid repair of all army truck routes, and also should provide for the strengthening of some bridges and for the removal of snow during the coming Winter. In accordance with this arrangement, $1,000,000 is being appropriated by the Legislature for such repairs. This bill includes the repair of the unimproved route in the western part of the State along Lake Erie, and one in a like condition which leads to Camp Upton, at Yaphank.

Some weeks ago we were informed that the Federal Government had extended aid in some parts of the country to localities where the army truck service had caused road injuries. This State did not ask for any such aid, but set out to provide for the situation wholly at its own expense.

The Hewitt bill, so-called, applies only to trucks in excess of the five-ton truck, which is the army truck standard, and does not apply to those already registered. It seemed clear that unless some restriction was made as to trucks of greater capacity than the army motor truck the situation might get beyond control. Consultation with manufacturers revealed the fact that many made no truck larger than the five-ton truck, and an expression of opinion was obtained that the five-ton truck was the largest truck, all things considered, that should be provided for. A question arose as to the exact weight of the five-ton truck with its load, and proper representations were made to Senator Hewitt, the introducer of the bill, to the effect that the five-ton truck, as now constructed, weighs slightly more than five tons, the exact weight varying with the different makes, and was expected to carry a load in excess of its rated capacity to the extent of 10 per cent. Provision has been made for the allowance asked for by the truck representatives.

Trucks in use in cities are not included. Our department has made an examination of the number of trucks in use upon the public highways of the State outside of cities, and it found that the total number in excess of the weights allowed by the Hewitt bill is less than 500. At the same time nearly 60,000 trucks are registered in the State, and something like 400,000 passenger cars.

Speaking generally, the improved highways of the country were not built to sustain the loads to which they are now so frequently subjected, principally by the heavy motor trucks. As I have stated in previous reports and public statements, commercial progress must be recognized on the one hand, and reasonable restrictions helping to save the highways already built for the use of the many must be provided for on the other.

This State up to the present time has expended for improved highways nearly $100,000,000. The counties and towns, wholly at their own expense, have built improved highways in mileage greater than that built by the State, and the total cost to them has been about $40,000,000.

It seems to this department that a limit of total load must be made. I find that the manufacturers of trucks favor such a limit. They, as well as this department, recognize the advantage of the preservation of the improved roads. The only question is, where shall the line be drawn? This is a fair subject for discussion. The present opinion of this department is that the heaviest army motor truck designed for use in war might well be considered a standard for peace.

BEST AUTO ROUTES FOR CAMP DIX TOUR

Many Bad Sections in New Jersey to be Avoided—Trip via Staten Island Is Preferable.

Owing to the poor condition of some of the New Jersey roads and the increasing number of inquiries at the offices of the American Automobile Association regarding the best route to Camp Dix, the touring department has made a careful inspection of various routes from New York and announces that, with the exception of the last stretch of about ten miles between Yardville and Camp Dix, there is now a hard-surfaced road for the entire distance. This particular stretch has been badly cut up by the army trucks but is passable if proper care is exercised.

During the greater part of last season the most popular route was via Freehold and Lakewood. This is no longer necessary, as the shorter alternate, via New Brunswick and Hightstown, affords a good average of roads all the way. Of the two main roads leading to New Brunswick, that via Staten Island and Perth Amboy is preferable at present, as it is in fairly good condition. It is several miles shorter than the other and avoids the traffic congestion incident to passing through Newark.

The Lincoln Highway from Rahway to Metuchen is in worse condition than ever, being full of holes. The attempt made last year to improve the road by filling up the worst holes with broken stones mixed with dirt is being repeated this Spring, with much the same result. Such a method of road maintenance is at best but a poor makeshift, and motorists will save much wear and tear on both car and tires if they avoid this stretch of road.

The best way is to keep straight ahead under the railroad in the western outskirts of Rahway instead of turning sharp right with the Lincoln Highway signs. Follow an excellent hard road through Woodbridge to Perth Amboy, where turn sharply to the right on New Brunswick Avenue. From this point there is an excellent road running straight through Metuchen to New Brunswick. It is possible to save about a mile by turning right in Woodbridge and cutting across to the Perth Amboy-Metuchen road, about half way between these towns. This short cut is rather rough in places, and most motorists prefer to run into Perth Amboy, even though it is slightly longer.

Those who are not familiar with this road are cautioned not to miss taking the turn to the left at the Post Office in New Brunswick. The Lincoln Highway signs should be disregarded, as they lead the motorist on to the direct road to Princeton, which is in very bad condition. The road through Hightstown is very good.

Return Loads System Working Well

The "return loads" bureau of the Motor Truck Club of New Jersey has been commended by a representative of the National Highways Transport Committee for the efficient manner in which it is handling the motor transport problem in the zone between New York and Philadelphia.

The Motor Truck Club and the Newark Board of Trade have a joint committee perfecting the system and seeking the co-operation of shippers.

LOCAL ROAD CONDITIONS.

Points for the Motorist in Week-End Suburban Tours.

Motorists who are preparing for their usual week-end or Sunday touring in the suburbs are naturally anxious at this time to know something about road conditions. O. M. Wells, the good roads investigator of the Automobile Club of America, says that motorists who cross the Forty-second Street Ferry and run north on the Hudson County Boulevard, will find a rough detour of six blocks necessary. The boulevard construction work, which has been in progress for some time, is expected to be finished next month.

Anderson Avenue from the Hudson County Boulevard to Leonia is in excellent condition and should be used to Hackensack and other northern New Jersey points, instead of running down Dan Kelly's hill.

From Leonia to Hackensack the road is in good condition, and also from Hackensack via Passaic Street, through Arcola, Hohokus, and Allendale, to three miles beyond Suffern. On the balance of the route through Tuxedo and Pleasant Valley to Newburg there are alternating stretches of good and poor road with some rough and worn macadam.

The Albany Post Road on the east side of the Hudson River, between New York and Albany, is open with no construction work in process excepting between Irvington and North Tarrytown. Motorists going to Briar Cliff and the Berkshires should run via the Saw Mill River Road.

Liberty Loan Auto Rally.

Representatives of the automobile industry will meet next Friday night at the Automobile Club of America for a patriotic rally under the auspices of the Rainbow Division of the Special Liberty Loan Committee for the Automobile and Accessory Trades. Cooperating with the committee are the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the Automobile Dealers' Association of the City of New York, the Automobile Club of America, the Brooklyn Motor Vehicle Dealers' Association, and the Bronx Automobile Dealers' Association.

Sergeant Harold Wright of the French Flying Corps and Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, will be among the speakers. Cards may be obtained from Charles A. Stewart, general manager of the Automobile Dealers Association, Hotel Woodward.

NEWS AND NOTES OF AUTO TRADE

Arrangements have been made with the Atkinson Automobile School, 235 West Fiftieth Street, to examine men and furnish information to those desiring to act as truck drivers and mechanics in the Medical Department. Sergeant John P. Daley has been assigned to the Atkinson School and will meet all men interested in joining that branch of the military service.

In addition to the practical manoeuvring done by the motorized section of the famous 330th Field Artillery at Camp Custer, Mich., 200 men have completed a course in the regimental motor school. The Chalmers engine was used as a model.

Robert W. Stanley has been appointed chief engineer and production manager of the Bourne Magnetic Truck Company. The Bourne Company, which manufactures two and three and one-half ton trucks equipped with the magnetic transmission, recently removed from Philadelphia to New York, now being associated with the General Electric Company at Fifth Avenue and 142d Street.

Tom Howard, New York manager of the Standard Woven Fabric Company, says that 75 per cent. of all automobile accidents are due to defective brake linings, basing his opinion on insurance statistics for the year 1917. He says that the brake lining multibestos is so woven and treated as to offer efficient resistance to frictional wear.

The Lobell-Aborn Company, 250 West Fifty-fifth Street, which has been handling the used car department for the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation, has acquired the used car department for the Chalmers Company and will be known as the authorized used car representative of the Chalmers-Maxwell Companies.

To provide additional facilities for the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, which recently established a truck department, three new buildings which will add 63,000 square feet of floor space are being erected at the Detroit plant.

One of the largest single shipments of motor cycles for the United States Government was made from the Hendee Manufacturing Company's Indian motor cycle factory in Springfield, Mass., recently in four army truck trains of thirty trucks each. Nearly 1,000 cases of Indian motor cycles, side cars, tires, and spare parts constituted the shipment.

H. Belden Case, New York manager of the motor lens division of the MacBeth-Evans Glass Company, has arranged a display of green-colored lenses at 1,600 Broadway.

A distance equal to about seven times around the world, or 140,000 miles, has been covered by a Haynes "Light Six," 1915 model, owned in New Orleans by John Grisa, in two and a half years, and the car is still running well.

A neat seating arrangement has been devised for the new Mitchell five-passenger club sedan. It is a folding chair or companion seat opposite the driver which can be folded against the side of the car, affording a 28½-inch slate to the rear seat. The folding chair is removable and can be placed in the carrying space in the rear.

Many owners of Cole cars, says an agency manager, are using very successfully one part kerosene with two parts gasoline, making it unnecessary for any owner who has the hot-spot manifold on his car to use high-test gasoline. From 12 to 15 miles to the gallon is the ordinary accomplishment of the Cole cars equipped with the new manifold.

Earl J. Moon, New York City representative of the Moon Motor Car Company, was in St. Louis recently to arrange through shipments of the new Moon one-thousand-dollar car to the New York agency.

Prices of all the Willys-Overland and Willys-Knight cars were raised on April 1. The lowest priced now are the Willys ninety roadster, $855, and the touring car, $850.

H. H. Franklin, President of the Franklin Automobile Company, urges all motorists to look closely to gasoline consumption per mile. It is more and more becoming the rule to regard the gasoline mileage of the tighter and more efficient cars as the standard of consumption.

In ceasing its truck tire production in Providence, the United States Tire Company believes it has adopted a wise bit of business stratagem. Providence is well situated as a distributing point and offers excellent transportation facilities especially by water routes. No announcement has been made as to when the American Locomotive Company's plant, recently purchased, will be put in operation.

How Do Your Chances Compare with His ?

FROM the British war office we learn that the death rate of men at war is 20 in each one thousand—2%. Among men of the same age in peaceful pursuits, the death rate is 10 in each one thousand—1%. This makes a difference in hazard of only one percent between you and the man in the trenches.

Yes, peace has her dangers as well as war, and they are practically all due to carelessness or neglect. In motoring, for instance, if you drive with defective brake linings, you are taking even greater chances with your life than the soldier who faces death in the grim struggle of "No Man's Land."

Insurance statistics show that 75% of all automobile accidents are due to defective brakes—and this means defective brake lining, for

The Lining is the Backbone of the Brake

Don't take unnecessary chances. Remember that the preservation of life and property is a matter of the utmost importance at this time. This means your life—your property—as well as the lives and property of others.

Multibestos Brake Lining on your car helps to conserve your life and property. It protects and safeguards you and your car as no other brake lining can. Its frictional or gripping quality gives you control of your car at all times. In ordinary use it brings you to a smooth gliding stop, firmly and silently. In emergency, Multibestos holds the wheels in a vice-like grip, bringing your car to a dead stop in a surprisingly short space.

According to engineering tests, Multibestos gives 25% above-the-average wear. It is economical from every standpoint. Insist upon Multibestos as equipment on your new car, or as replacement of the brake linings on the car you now drive. This is your best form of accident insurance.

WAR LABOR BOARD FOR INCREASING PRODUCTION

Body Just Formed Will Endeavor to Maintain Harmony Between Employes and Labor in Order to Speed Up Work of American Industries.

By JAMES A. EMERY, of the National Industrial Conference Board.

WITHOUT attracting proportionate attention or comment, a remarkable social experiment of critical interest to our country is about to be made. A representative committee of employers and organized labor will undertake, through machinery jointly devised, to secure uninterrupted maximum production of war necessities and conciliate, mediate, or arbitrate inevitable differences as to hours, wages, and working conditions by the application of standards of mutual conduct which they agree ought to govern the employment relation for the duration of the war.

The joint committee which fathered these proposals was appointed by the Secretary of Labor Jan. 28, 1918, and consisted of five representative employers nominated by the National Industrial Conference Board, and five officers of international unions named by the American Federation of Labor. Each group then selected a representative of the public to participate in the conferences. The employer representatives nominated ex-President Taft; the union representatives Frank P. Walsh, head of the old Industrial Relations Commission.

This joint committee, after repeated conferences at Washington, made recommendations to the Secretary of Labor on March 29 suggesting the creation of a War Labor Board to conciliate and finally adjust labor disputes affecting war production, and offered certain principles and policies to govern the administration of the proposed board.

With the approval of the Secretary of Labor the President of the United States, by Executive proclamation on April 9, adopted the proposals of the joint conference and appointed the same representatives of employers and unions to constitute the National War Labor Board. The President further urged "upon all employers and employes within the United States the necessity of utilizing the means and methods thus provided for the adjustment of all industrial disputes, and requested "that during the pendency of mediation and arbitration through the said means and methods there shall be no discontinuance of industrial operations which would result in curtailment in the production of war necessities."

The need for devising an effective means of preventing the continuously increasing interruptions of our war production has become steadily greater. So far as it has been and is being caused by agents of the public enemy it has been and will be the subject of increasingly drastic legislation and police administration, but so far as it has been due to economic differences intensified by the circumstances of war production, agitation, and suspicious discontent it is but partially and ineffectually met by existing agencies or the experimental policies of the Government.

Soon after the declaration of war labor dispute adjustment machinery was created by agreement between the Secretary of War and Mr. Gompers in relation to cantonment construction, by the Shipping Board, and the international officers of the craft unions involved, while the Department of Labor and various temporary committees and commissions, including the President's Mediation Commission, undertook the investigation, mediation, or arbitration of general classes of employment controversies. Despite these various agencies, none of which were co-extensive with the field of industrial production, from our entrance into the war, strikes steadily increased in number, extent, and intensity.

An investigation of strikes between April 6 and Oct. 6, 1917, made by the National Industrial Conference Board, showed during that period a verified loss of 6,285,319 production days. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, in its December, 1917, bulletin reported for the preceding month of September 171 strikes involving 147,349 persons whose average loss of time indicated a minimum labor loss of more than a million workdays.

The same bulletin, reporting from official statistics of the German Empire, indicated that the United States lost through strikes in the single month of September, 1917, more workdays than the German Empire from the same cause in the whole year 1916. Whether we prefer the conclusions of a private body predicated upon painstaking inquiry or the comparisons afforded by official figures, either indicates an actual and threatened loss of production through labor disputes, with their social reaction upon national unity of thought and action, constituting a tragic menace. Whatever the motive of those who stop, or threaten to stop, the production of ships or supplies for ourselves or our allies, they consciously or unconsciously perform the work of the public enemy.

Great Britain met this condition by the famous Treasury Agreement of March, 1915, between the Government and the representatives of all the British trade unions. The unionists were asked to abandon every restrictive shop practice or custom threatening the maximum output of munitions, to agree that there should be no strikes affecting such production, that a dilution of unskilled, female and unorganized labor be accepted, with a compulsory arbitration of all differences. In return for this the Government assured a limitation of employers' profits and the restoration, without prejudice to the unions, of the customs and practices which they abandoned for the period of the war. In other words, highly organized Great Britain became an open shop to win the war, for organized British labor accepted the proposal, and has kept its pledge with magnificent loyalty.

American labor conditions as we entered the war were substantially those which Great Britain reached by agreement. There, from 80 per cent. to 90 per cent. of the war industries, including shipbuilding, were highly unionized. Here the reverse was the fact. The Naval Consulting Board which examined and classified plants available for munition production reported, prior to our entrance into the war, 18,654 establishments, of which 1867 or slightly more than 10 per cent. were union shops. We therefore possessed as a matter of fact and law, upon entering the war, a condition which Great Britain sought and established as a national policy through negotiation and after learning its necessity by costly experience.

Our industrial circumstances are, therefore, not only unlike those of our great ally, but the establishment of the War Labor Board presents an essentially different method in principle of fixing standards of conduct and methods of adjusting disputes. Great Brittin sanctioned the Treasury agreement by enacting its industrial policy and the Government's pledge into the Munition acts of 1915-16. We have undertaken to accomplish the same purpose without legislation through representatives of employers and unions directly recognizing and declaring for the imposition of specific reciprocal voluntary restraints in the conduct of their relations with each other, in order to minimize causes of disagreement, while adjusting such disputes as arise between them through machinery of their own devising, which they jointly administer in the presence and with the aid of representatives of the public.

The board is without legal authority to compel the acceptance of its policy or methods, the reference to it of any dispute, or the enforcement of any award. It cannot compel a single employer to adopt its views or a single employe to remain at his task. But the circumstances of its formation, the representative quality of its membership, the inherent worth, perceived necessity, and apparent practicability of its principles and procedure attach a powerful moral sanction to its proceedings.

For the American people realize more clearly each day the necessity of uninterrupted production. The needs of their soldiery are calling insistently from the trenches. They know their cause to be equally imperiled whether that production is stopped by stubborn disputants or the military effort of the public enemy. If it cannot be assured by the operation of a voluntary arrangement, the people are likely to demand that the very extreme of authority shall be exerted to obtain it. It will be a notable and inspiring achievement indeed if the recognition of a common obligation to the national defense will supply an ample substitute for any exercise of public authority.

The fundamental declaration which underlies the whole scheme is the recognition by both parties that "there should be no strikes or lockouts during the war." Expressed in the form of an opinion rather than an imperative pledge, it expresses the end to which all else is subordinate. To avoid this wasteful, and for the war unendurable method of settling labor disputes, the board arms itself with a means of flexibly adapting its organization to the circumstances of any disagreement. It refuses first of all to take cognizance of any case in which by agreement or statute a medium of adjustment is provided, until that medium has been tried and failed. Even after its intervention has been invoked the board may drop any case if its character or importance does not justify its further consideration.

The action of the board is invoked by application of either of the parties or the Secretary of Labor. It may operate through permanent or temporary local committees of its own appointment, provided always that employers and employes are equally represented. It creates its own methods and practice as it progresses and may alter these in the light of its experience.

While the plan emphasizes a determination to exhaust the resources of mediation and conciliation before proceeding to arbitration, it nevertheless provides, in the event of the failure of these methods, for the choice of an umpire, either by the unanimous vote of the board or by a drawing from a list of ten suitable and disinterested persons nominated by the President of the United States. The decision of such umpire is to be final and without appeal. The subject matter to which the board confines itself are controversies directly, or in its opinion indirectly but detrimentally, affecting production necessary for the conduct of the war. The whole working arrangement is by its very nature for the duration of the war.

A means of adjustment without standards would be a procedure without substantive law. The Joint Conference Committee therefore proposed, and the Executive proclamation approves, a brief declaration of principles to govern the board or its representatives in the consideration of any controversy. These include a declaration of the right of all workers to a living wage in recognition of the principle that found perhaps its best expression in the famous labor encyclical of Pope Leo XIII., a recommendation to assist in the mobilization of labor by providing lists of workers to the Department of Labor through trade unions, State and Federal employment agencies, and the management of industrial establishments. Women workers, it is declared, should be allowed equal pay for equal work on work ordinarily performed by men and be limited to tasks proportionate to their strength.

In respect to hours of labor the basic eight-hour day is recognized in all cases where it is required by law. In all other instances hours of service are determinable by the public necessity and the welfare, health, and proper comfort of the worker.

A most important declaration is made with respect to the necessity for "maximum production," which, it is asserted, "should be maintained, and methods of work and operation on the part of employers or workers which operate to delay or limit production, or which have a tendency to artificially increase the cost thereof, should be discouraged."

It is recognized that local custom and standards should prevail in fixing wages, hours, and conditions of labor.

In addition to these declarations of economic standards and policy, and for the assured continuance of established safeguards and regulations for the protection of health, safety, and welfare of workers' special declarations are made upon the subject of the "right to organize" and in recognition and protection of existing employment conditions in munition establishments. These declarations are for the apparent purpose of clearly affirming for trade unions the right to organize and deal collectively with their employers and engage in all legitimate activities to that end.

The non-union worker and the employer not at present dealing with trade unions is assured of equal protection against the use of any coercive means either to compel the one to take membership in a union or the other, against his will, to deal with it.

It is likewise clearly stated that where union standards and conditions exist they shall be maintained, but where union men and women or nonunion men and women now work together the continuance of such a condition shall not be deemed a "grievance" by organized labor.

While I am a member of the National Industrial Conference Board, I neither know nor am authorized to express the opinions of its membership nor of the employer members of the War Labor Board, but I should assume from antecedent circumstances that the representatives neither of employer nor employe intended to make this declaration of principles exclusive, but rather sought through it to clarify the ambiguous interpretations and misunderstandings which have frequently arisen in the endeavor to apply the standards which early in the war the National Council of Defense declared ought to govern the employment relation throughout the struggle. It is substantially summed up in the declaration that neither employer nor employe should take advantage of the circumstances of the war to obtain a condition which they were unable to secure prior thereto.

Of course neither employer nor employe can undertake to define the rights or privileges of the other, nor substitute his opinions or desires with respect to the same for those which spring from the nature of our Government or the decisions of our highest judical tribunals. But the accredited representatives of such parties can, as they have in this instance, and with great moral authority, recommend a course of conduct with respect to the relations of employers and trade unions, which, springing from exceptional experience, should be calculated to diminish the differences likely to arise from disagreeing interpretations of the employment relation.

The economic standards proposed should be mutually acceptable. The right to organize, which is undeniable, is properly conditioned by condemnation of the use of coercive measures and the assurance of the recognition of the rights and protection of the nonconformant, whether employer or employe. If trade unions by superior efficiency or service can merit and win the membership of individual workers, and if employers voluntarily and not because of coercive threats prefer to deal with them because of a demonstrated advantage, neither the individual nor the public has cause for complaint.

The experiment is unique in political history, the stake a tremendous one. The practical operation of the plan will be its true test. But the object it seeks to accomplish is at present essential to our national safety, and we should, therefore, give to the enterprise our hearty co-operation with every desire to make it a notable success.

USED PIANOS IN DEMAND.

British Paying Big Prices for Second-hand Instruments.

The great excess of demand over supply in the piano trade of Great Britain has resulted in dealers practically circularizing whole districts in the hope of finding a few people who are willing to sell their pianos. Many families, it is said, are constantly receiving offers for their instruments from dealers entirely unknown to them. With a greater demand for pianos than ever before, due to so many people earning war wages, and not only a curtailed domestic piano production, but imports of instruments almost entirely stopped by Government regulation, used pianos of all sorts and conditions are bringing unheard-of prices.

According to Consul Harry A. McBride of London the greatest demand comes from the provincial manufacturing and munitions centres, where wages have had such a marked increase since the war started. In connection with the curtailed domestic production, he explains that the wood and wire formerly used in pianos are now required for airplanes, and that many of the piano manufacturers have given over their plants to the making of airplanes or airplane parts.

Second-hand baby grand pianos, which are said to be the most in demand, are now selling for as much as $510, though a few years ago they brought when new only about $365. Old second-hand upright instruments, which when new sold in normal times for about $120, are now sold for $250 or thereabout.

Poppy Growing in Tunis Stopped.

In order effectually to prohibit the sale or use of opium in Tunis, a decree has been issued forbidding the cultivation of the poppy plant in Tunisia, and ordering the destruction of wild poppy. The penalties for violating the new edict are a fine of from 500 to 1,000 francs if the land is open, and from 1,000 to 3,000 francs if the land is walled.

FUEL AND FOOD FROM OUR FORESTS

Vast Storehouse Adaptable to Present-Day Needs, Says an Expert.

WOOD INSTEAD OF COAL

Production of Former for Fuel Purposes Might Be Greatly Increased in New York State.

By A. B. RECKNAGEL,
Professor of Forest Management and Utilization, Cornell University, (on leave.) Forester to the Empire State Forest Products Association, Member New York State Wood Fuel Advisory Committee.

It is a trite saying that history repeats itself. Forestry in Europe got its start owing to a shortage of fuel wood. Transportation systems were inadequate and even the charcoal burners could not keep up with the rapidly increasing demand. It was at this time that Colbert in France enacted wise forest laws. It is not impossible that the fuel shortage in America may force a like development of forestry practice to conserve our forest resources.

Wood is an accessory fuel, but it is a much more efficient fuel than most people realize. In comparing the heating value of coal and wood, one pound of anthracite coal may be taken as the equivalent of two pounds of seasoned wood. But coal is sold by the ton and wood by the cord, hence it means more to say that one cord of hickory, oak, beech, birch, hard maple, ash, and apple is equivalent in heating value to one ton of coal; that it takes one and one-half cords of chestnut, gray birch, sycamore, and soft maple to equal a ton of coal, and that two cords of cedar, poplar, basswood, white pine, Norway pine, hemlock, spruce, and balsam fir are required to produce the heat of one ton of anthracite. These figures are for cords of eighty cubic feet, solid wood, well seasoned to 15 or 20 per cent. moisture.

A glance at the above list of woods shows that the heavier woods are the best for fuel. For practical purposes the relative heating value of equal volumes of dry nonresinous woods may be judged from their weight. Equal weights of dry nonresinous woods give off practically the same amount of heat in burning. Thus, hickory weighs twice as much as spruce and hence it takes twice the bulk of spruce to equal the fuel value of hickory. The weight of a cord of heavy, medium, and light woods just listed would be approximately 4,000, 3,000, and 2,000 pounds, respectively.

Wood for fuel, to be efficient, must be seasoned. This is one of the complicating factors in the present emergency. When wood containing water is burned, part of the heat is taken up in raising the water to the boiling point and converting it into steam. All this heat is lost, and the greener the wood the greater the loss.

Conceding the general value of wood as a substitute for coal, the next question is how to get it. There is an abundance of suitable raw material for cordwood, but the transportation and labor problems enter in and make it imperative to cut the wood where the consumer can be reached quickly and cheaply. Preferably the cutting should be done by the consumer himself, although, in the future, it may be desirable to produce cordwood in commercial quantities just like lumber and other forest products. When this time comes, the lumber industry will be able to turn out immense quantities of wood fuel at reasonable prices. At present the price of coal and its relatively greater efficiency do not make the project economically attractive to the owners and operators of timber land.

The farmer is the immediate consumer of fuel who must first be reached. Professor Collingwood of Cornell furnishes the following figures:

There are, approximately, 4,500,000 acres of farm wood lots in the State, divided among approximately 200,000 farmers. Before the war the annual consumption of cord wood for fuel in New York State was 3,000,000 cords. Of this 79 per cent. was used by the farmers on the farms, 15 per cent. was used in towns and villages of 30,000 and less, and the remaining 6 per cent. in industry, luxury fires in the larger cities, &c. It is possible during the next few years to cut from the farm wood lots one cord per acre per year and materially benefit these wood lots. This would increase the annual production from 3,000,000 to 4,500,000. This increase of 1,500,000 cords would take the place of approximately 1,125,000 tons of coal figured on the basis of one cord of wood equal to three-quarters of a ton of coal."

The same argument may be put in another way: There are approximately 200,000 farms in New York State; if each of these uses an average of five tons of coal yearly, there would be an annual saving of 1,000,000 tons. The present year's shortage of coal is figured at 50,000,000 tons.

An active campaign to obtain accurate information regarding the supply of fuel wood and for insuring the cutting of only wood that should properly be cut has been inaugurated. The State Conservation Commission at Albany has established a Wood Fuel Bureau, whence the educational and informative campaign will emanate. Furthermore, the State has been divided into four districts, each under the supervision of a trained forester. Greater New York is in the southeastern district, under the supervision of a forester provided by the Conservation Commission.

The foresters will work in co-operation with farm bureaus, officials of the local Granges, and the County Fuel Administrators. Local Wood Fuel Committees are to be formed in every county to co-operate with the County Fuel Administrator, the committees being composed of the Farm Bureau Agent, the officers of the local Grange and the County Fuel Administrator. These committees will act not only in an advisory capacity, but will take every possible means to provide suitable machinery for wood cutting. They will also carry on local publicity campaigns to stimulate wood production and the substitution of wood for coal wherever practicable.

In stimulating production, the question of markets is important. The man who produces wood in excess of his own consumption must be assured a reasonable return for his labor. To meet this need, municipal wood yards could be established or arrangements made by County Fuel Administrators with existing wood yards. A case has already come up where an Adirondack operator has offered to put a large crew of men at cutting cordwood all next Summer provided he be guaranteed a price sufficiently high to cover the possible further advance in wages and the cost of provisions before the wood could be delivered next Winter.

Labor is a crucial factor. Farmers apparently no longer have any spare time to cut wood even from their own wood-lots. It has been suggested that by placing power wood saws and wood-splitting machines at central points, one or two expert operators could produce wood for an entire community. A Christmas dispatch from Washington stated that convict labor is to be used in Virginia to aid in the Fuel Administration's plan to popularize the burning of wood in place of coal wherever possible and that arrangements had been completed for each of the 130 convict camps in the State to cut 100 cords of wood for public consumption at a cost estimated at $2 a cord.

It would seem that New York State might follow suit; for even though the Constitution unfortunately prevents the cutting of wood on State land, stumpage could be secured from private owners at a very reasonable cost. Cordwood may be made from the dead, overmature, and decaying trees, and from those trees thinned out from too crowded stands, resulting in a direct benefit to the woodland. The cutting of cordwood, therefore, presents an opportunity to improve the forest and, by more complete utilization of trees cut for lumber, to decrease the fire menace. Nor should the important fact be overlooked that wood is a renewable resource.

The transportation problem is largely a local one, and until the emergency becomes acute, the general use of railroads for transporting cordwood should be avoided because of car shortage. Instead sleighs, motor trucks, and other local conveyances should be employed wherever possible.

Man's worst ills are being cold and being hungry. "Cold and hungry"—what a picture of misery this conjures up to the mind! In the past Indians turned to the forests for food when other sources failed. The very word "Adirondack" is said to mean "Wood-eaters;" the name given to a tribe of Indians whom extremity forced to eat the soft inner bark of trees and other such foodstuffs. It is not likely that we citizens of New York will become "Adirondacks," but it is, nevertheless, true that our forests are a source of hitherto unheeded food products for man and beast.

There is a report that 100 cars, carrying a total of 3,750,000 pounds of pine nuts, (seeds of pinyon pine,) have been shipped to New York from the forests of New Mexico. The nuts average 10 cents a pound in car lots; a total value of $375,000.

The fruit of the maple is not edible, but the sap is—as maple sugar and maple syrup. The sugar situation promises to be a pressing problem during the whole course of the war. Maple sugar and syrup are a welcome auxiliary; they need not be placed upon the market in competition with cane sugar, but rather in a class by themselves.

The United States Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., has made the interesting discovery that western larch contains from 6 to 8 per cent. of water soluble material which is mainly galactose sugar. Various products, including table syrup, ethyl alcohol, and mucic acid, which may be used as a constituent of baking powder, can be manufactured therefrom.

The horse chestnut is coming into its own. From London comes the report that the Ministry of Munitions has found that horse chestnuts can replace some cereals "which have been necessary for the production of an article of great importance in the prosecution of the war." Plans have been made to collect thousands of tons of them.

First in importance, of course, are our native nuts—beechnuts, butternuts, walnuts, chestnuts, hazelnuts, and several kinds of hickorynuts. The kernels of all these are not only toothsome but highly nutritious, and are used by vegetarians to replace meat. Dietitians give the following relative values of nuts and other common protein foods: 6.3 ounces of English walnut meats, which are similar to those of black walnuts and butternuts, contain the same energy equivalent as 6.2 ounces of round steak, 4.6 ounces of bread, 9 ounces of eggs, 2.7 ounces of cheese, or one pint of whole milk.

The direct use of wood for human food does not appear to be practical. Mr. Howard Weiss, former director of the United States Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., has stated that "the use of wood flour as a source of human food possesses very little merit, because the human body is not adapted to the digestion of cellulose in the same way that this material is digested by animals. Consequently the use of wood flour for such purposes is purely in the nature of a filler, and a human fed on such material would starve. Wood flour, however, is used extensively in the manufacture of linoleum, dynamite, wall papers, &c."

It is, however, the indirect use of the forest for food that is of paramount importance—namely in breeding fish and game and in pasturing domestic animals, such as cattle, sheep and swine. It has been estimated that the forests of New York produce approximately 5,000 deer annually, yielding 500,000 pounds of venison, and that the meat derived from wild rabbits, feathered game, &c., is enormous in the aggregate.

Fuel and food from our forests is not a new idea. It is as old as the history of mankind. What is new is the adaptation of this natural resource to our present day needs. It will be found that the forest is a vast storehouse of man's necessities and that, properly used, it is a storehouse constantly replenished by bounteous nature.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The continued discussion in Washington over the question of raising the price of wheat to $2.50 is still a disturbing factor in the wheat position. Farmers are apparently holding off in the hopes of securing higher prices, and the movement at primary points continues small. Weather conditions were again favorable over practically the entire belt, with rising temperatures after the recent cool and unsettled weather. Mills continue to complain of small supplies of wheat, and the Government is apparently taking the bulk of mill offers to keep up with their export allotment.

RYE.

The local rye market was dull and nominal, with offers light, while the demand was poor.

CORN.

There was a very sharp break in the corn market on Saturday, the May position in Chicago closing ⅜c lower, while the new contracts were 3⅝c lower. There was heavy selling throughout the greater part of the session, and it was the prevailing impression that operators were inclined to believe that prices were too high, in view of the fact that the contract is a low-grade one, and that there is no telling what low-grade cash corn will be selling at in June and July. In the local cash market kiln dried No. 3 yellow was quoted at $1.90½; No. 4 yellow at $1.83½, and No. 3 white at $2.20½, cost and freight, New York.

July	1.53⅜	1.50⅜	1.50½	1.54⅜	1.3[illegible]

OATS.

The oats market was also under pressure, and prices at the close were ¾ to 1½c net lower. Advices from the West said that farmers were offering oats quite freely and it was quite evident that the splendid prospects for the new crop are having their influence. Cash premiums were lower, and while exporters showed a disposition to make purchases, the demand was not of sufficient volume to absorb the offers. Sentiment was also influenced by the decline in other markets and longs were timid about carrying their oats over Sunday. The local cash market was weak, natural quoted at $1.01 to $1.02, and clipped white $1.03 to $1.05, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was inactive and irregular. The firmness in live hogs caused a certain amount of strength early, but subsequently prices gave way in sympathy with grain, lard and ribs closing easy, while pork experienced a good recovery. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 19,000; estimated for Monday 55,000 and for next week 185,000; Kansas City received 1,000 and Omaha 11,000.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was entirely devoid of feature as far as contracts were concerned and no prices were made. The spot position was steady, with an absence of selling pressure, and prices were well maintained.

COFFEE.

Saturday's coffee market witnessed holiday conditions, and trading ruled generally quiet. The opening was at declines of 1 to 2 points, and trading became a little more active, with prices easing off under outside liquidation and in the absence of any substantial demand. The close showed net losses for the day of 3 to 8 points. The special cable to the Exchange reported the Rio spot market unchanged, Santos spots 50 reis lower, and Santos futures 25 to 50 reis lower. Receipts at the two ports were 23,000 bags, against 14,000 bags a year ago. Range of prices:

SUGAR.

As yet there is little or no improvement in refined sugar, although consumers are able to satisfy their wants through the retailers. A large amount of raw sugar is expected to arrive next week, which, it is believed, will allow a fair increase in total meltings and more liberal distribution of granulated to the trade. Private advices from Cuba report only 193 mills now grinding, two having stopped and one having been destroyed by fire. There have been some cane fires, but it is still believed that a record crop will be made. The International Sugar Committee reported no raw sugars purchased during the day.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 4,775 packages. Continued shortage of desirable grades of fresh table butter, and prices have further advanced about half a cent. The secondary qualities are sympathizing to some extent. Creamery, higher than extras, a pound, 44½@45c; extras, (92 score,) 44c; firsts, (88 to 91 score,) 41½@43½c; seconds, (83 to 87 score,) 39@40½c; thirds, 37@38c; creamery, unsalted, higher than extras, 45½@46c; extras, 44½@45c; firsts, 42½@44c; seconds, 39½@42c; creamery, held, as to quality, 35@42c; State dairy, tubs, finest, 43½c; good to prime, 40@43c; common to fair, 35@38c; renovated, extras, 40c; firsts, 38@39c; lower grades, 34@37c; imitation creamery, firsts, 35½@36½c; ladies, current make, firsts, 34½@35c; seconds, 33½c; lower grades, 32@33c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 33@33½c; No. 2, 32½c; lower grades, 29@32c.

EGGS.—16,835 cases. Receipts are lighter and advices indicate more moderate supplies in transit. So much of the Northern packed stock is going directly to warehouses for shippers' account or on account of track buyers that the offerings of high-quality eggs for current distribution are limited and dealers are obliged to pay firmer prices for them in order to secure an adequate supply. The market here is naturally being drawn up more closely to a more possible parity with country costs and closed quite firm at the improvement quoted. Nearby white eggs continue quite freely offered and unimproved. Fresh gathered, extras, a dozen, 38½c; storage packed, firsts, 36½@38c; regular packed, extra firsts, 36½@37c; regular packed, firsts, 34½@35c; seconds and poorer, 32½@34c; fresh-gathered, dirties, No. 1, 32½@33c; No. 2 and poorer, 31@32c; fresh gathered, checks, good to choice dry, 30@31c; undergrades, 25@29c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery, whites, fine to fancy, 38@40c; ordinary to prime, 37@38c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 37@38c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 30@38c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery, browns, 37½@38½c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 35@37c; duck eggs, 38@55c.

MACHINERY IN SOUTH CHINA.

Most of That Imported Last Year Was of American Make.

Commenting on South China trade in a report to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, Consul Gen. George E. Anderson, Hong Kong, says that, of the rather disappointing quantity of 1917 imports of machinery into that part of the world, most of them have been of American machines. A modern tannery, for instance, has been built in Hong Kong, and has been very largely equipped with American machines and appliances. The same thing is true of a cracker and biscuit factory also erected there, though in this case the entire layout of machinery was brought over from this country. South China railways took four American locomotives and twenty miles of American rails during the year, and probably would have taken more if earlier demands from other parts of the world had not been so great.

Mr. Anderson also reports that there has been some business done in American knitting machinery, and considerable more business would have been done if the machines could have been obtained. Though high prices and the general difficulty of obtaining them limited the demand, some business was also done in machine tools and in metal and woodworking machinery. He further says that practically everything in the way of boilers, tanks, &c., used in South China is made there. A very large part of the machinery sundries, lubricating oils, and graphites, special cements and special paints is now being imported from the United States.

Leather Belts for Women.

There is a great deal of leather of one kind or another being used these days, it is said, on suits and coats for women. Though the Sam Browne belt, being rather an extreme military style, is reported not to be having a very widespread popularity, plain leather belts, both wide and narrow, without the cross section over the shoulder, are very much in favor everywhere. Tan belts of this sort are being worn a great deal, but black, frequently patent leather finish, is said to be the most popular of all. Many of the late Spring coats and suits, and even some of the dresses, are not complete without the leather belt to set them off.

TOBACCO FROM JAPAN.

Used for Blending in "Turkish" and "Egyptian" Cigarettes.

A shortage in the world's supply of leaf tobacco for "Turkish" cigarettes has caused American makers of these "smokes" to turn to Japan for material to blend with other leaf in manufacturing the "Turkish" or "Egyptian" cigarettes of the cheaper grades. So large has this demand grown, according to figures supplied to the Department of Commerce by Vice Consul W. R. Langdon, who is at Yokohama, that of the $696,368 worth of leaf tobacco shipped from Japan in 1917, $430,491 worth of it came to this country.

In his report Mr. Langdon points out that Turkish, Macedonian and Virginian tobaccos have been successfully planted in Japan and Korea. Turkish tobaccos grown in Korea contain the aroma and all the good points of that produced in Turkey and Macedonia. Mr. Langdon also says that, while the Imperial Government Monopoly Bureau directs the Japanese tobacco-growing industry, it does not export tobacco directly. The exportation of this tobacco is conducted through commercial houses to which licenses to engage in the business of shipping out tobacco are granted by the bureau.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular on Small Turnover—Cotton Breaks $5 a Bale—Reserve Up.

On the Stock Exchange yesterday's short session reflected no new estimates of the bearing on the ultimate outcome of the war of the German offensive, which has not yet passed the critical stage. The tone of General Haig's order to his troops was calculated to destroy any lingering idea that the British have been retreating as a matter of military policy and might be expected to launch a great counteroffensive at any moment. The situation remains extremely serious, but the outstanding fact is that the Allies have contested every foot of ground and are ready to maintain the same stubborn resistance so long as the enemy is able to throw his troops into the assaults. The market opened slightly lower yesterday, and most issues closed fractionally off, but there was no evidence of uneasiness which might have led to selling as a precaution against possible bad news over Sunday. Steel closed off ¼ of a point on a fairly heavy turnover, and Distillers, which was second in point of activity, lost ¾.

Excess reserves of the Clearing House banks gained substantially last week, yesterday's statement showing an increase of $21,418,000, which brought the excess over requirements up to $60,006,000, the largest margin reported since Feb. 9. There was an increase in loans of no less than $167,706,000, reflecting the banks' purchases of Treasury certificates, and deposits made a net gain of $3,673,000. Rediscounts and advances at the Federal Reserve Bank increased $112,000,000 and Treasury certificates decreased $107,000,000, a result of the repurchase by the banks of certificates that had been sold to the Reserve Bank under agreement to repurchase within fifteen days.

Cotton continued its violent decline yesterday, May selling down 110 points, or $5.50 per bale, under the leadership of Southern orders. The reaction from the record high prices made two weeks ago has now lowered the price by more than $20 per bale.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Bell Telephone Earnings.

The report of the Bell telephone system's earnings during the first quarter of 1918 furnished yesterday some interesting comparisons of income and expenses. The aggregate operating revenue of $76,300,000 was about $9,700,000 larger than the average result of the corresponding quarters in 1916 and 1917. Operating expenses of $53,690,000 were $9,658,000 greater than average for the preceding years, with final product of these closely parallel movements showing in the net income, which was almost the same in the 1918 quarter, and the average of the other quarters. After paying taxes, a balance remained of $16,800,000 in the three months ended March 31 last, and outside income of $2,470,000 was about $550,000 larger than the preceding average, but interest and rental charges increased, and the net income available for dividends, amounting to $12,765,000, was nearly $1,500,000 under that of the averaged periods.

Safety Razor Shares.

When the Gillette Safety Razor stock was brought out several months ago conditions were not altogether propitious for a new flotation, and the Street heard many conjectures as to what the market might do. If the syndicate members had a hard task selling the stock it has never become a subject of comment, and the fact that current quotations run somewhat higher than the original price of $80 a share would indicate that the market has held up well since the stock was issued. The recent declaration of an extra dividend of $1 a share has helped. Last week the shares were reported as sold at $82 on the curb. The March minimum was $77½ and the high $80¼.

Petroleum Development Work.

With the Petroleum Department of the Fuel Administration taking measures to increase the supplies of drilling materials for American producers, an expansion of operations in the oil fields may be expected to proceed rapidly as Summer weather approaches. From Wyoming come reports of comprehensive plans for the development of new areas and haste to make up the work in the established fields which was held back by severe Winter weather. The eyes of the statisticians turn expectantly to the new territory in Kansas, where several unusually large wells were brought in last year. The producers have before them the fact of recent price advances for petroleum and the promise that the Government officials would not frown on others in the future if the state of supply and demand required them.

The Market Value of News.

Apropos of the sweeping of the latest batch of companies within the long arm of the Government, a man who has a substantial financial interest in the well-being of some of these very companies remarked yesterday: "Before the War Department puts a casualty list in the newspapers, we are told, it takes great pains to notify those most interested of the blow that has fallen, and to give them what information it has. Of course, a money loss, or money uncertainty, is trivial compared with a loss like that; but I would like to have the same principle applied a little more freely. It is a bit irritating to read in the newspapers of the commandeering of a company you are interested in, with the certainty that the terms on which it is done will mean money in or out of your pocket, as the case may be; to call up the company officers, and find they know no more than you do, beyond what they see in the newspapers, of what has really happened."

Express Companies' Uncertainties.

The Presidents of all the big express companies are to gather in Washington during the coming week for a series of conferences with Director General McAdoo regarding the possibility of their organizations being taken over, on somewhat the same terms as the railroads and coastwise steamship lines, to be operated by the Government for the duration of the war. Negotiations have been going on more or less at long distance for some time, but now the parties concerned are to assemble around the table. Incidentally, rumors that the plan to take over the express companies had fallen through, and that the companies were to be left out in the cold were denied by all concerned yesterday.

Cotton Still Going Down.

The downward break in cotton prices continued yesterday during the short session, at an even greater rate than on Thursday and Friday. May futures lost over 100 points in the two hours. Prices also continued downward in the principal Southern spot markets, which until Friday had remained virtually unaffected by the break on the local market. A new reason for the decline was afforded by the publication of consumption features for March, which showed that although more spindles were turning than a year ago, considerably less cotton had been sun.

Wanted— A Real Salesman

to sell American Credit Insurance Bonds.

If you are a high-calibred salesman with brains, initiative, force and good manners, if you have a clean record of proven ability, if you can close big business with millionaire corporations, here is an unusual opportunity for you.

The Unlimited Policy of The American Company does far more than merely insure against abnormal credit losses. It serves to prevent losses. It establishes a safe credit basis. It cultivates confidence and stabilizes business. It is needed by every progressive manufacturer and jobber.

Such a service is worthy of the very best effort of the best salesman in this city—a man who would not limit himself by working on anything but a straight commission basis. If you can qualify and have the evidence that you can "deliver the goods," see the General Agent at the address below.

STATES' WAR QUOTAS ABOVE MARK SET

Reports Show Most of Them Have Exceeded Washington's Expectation.

MANY IN "BANNER" CLASS

Illinois Gave a Division of Volunteers and 27,000 Shipyard Workers.

The second list of reports from Governors of States in which the Executives show the war achievements of their respective States has been made public by the Committee on Public Information. These reports, compiled at the request of the Government, show what each State has contributed to the two first Liberty Loans, the support accorded the Red Cross and other officially recognized relief agencies, the number of volunteers to the regular and guard armies and the navy, and the number of selective draft men who have been called to the colors and reported for duty.

In the first list, published in THE TIMES three weeks ago, appeared the report of Governor Whitman of New York, in which it was shown that New York exceeded its quotas in the Liberty Loans, that it has furnished two divisions to the regular army, a division to the guard army, and over two divisions of drafted men. Other States reported in the first report included Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas, and Rhode Island.

The largest State, whose report is included in the second list is Illinois. It shows that Illinois is one of the "banner" States of the Union; that it has supplied a division of more than 27,000 volunteers for the regular army; that its entire naval militia entered the navy; that its National Guard, now in Federal service, approximates within a few hundred a complete division, and that it has sent into service its full quota of selective draft men for the national army. Governor Lowden also points out that Illinois was called on for 23,600 volunteer shipyard workers, and that it responded with 27,000.

Illinois subscribed $476,779,300 to the first two war loans. The amount subscribed to the First Liberty Loan was $205,047,150, and to the Second Loan $271,731,750. The women raised $18,000,000 of the combined total.

The Red Cross has a membership in Illinois of 1,302,428, and the State has contributed $5,001,296 to the war funds of the society.

"When the war commenced," Governor Lowden says, "it was not fully understood by our people how vitally and directly the war concerned us. There was, therefore, at that time more or less of apathy. But as the war has gone on, our people have come to realize more and more that in this war everything that we hold dear is at stake and that it must be won at any cost."

The report of Governor James M. Cox of Ohio shows that that State has given a complete division to the guard army, that it has far surpassed its quota of volunteers for the regular army and navy, and that Ohio people subscribed to the two first Liberty Loans a total of $437,598,000, of which $168,417,900 was for the First and $269,180,300 for the Second. The amount subscribed to the Red Cross was $10,087,428.

With reference to the war sentiment in Ohio, the Governor says:

"The plain people of Ohio see this war as President Woodrow Wilson sees it—a grimly necessary way of bringing about an honorable and lasting peace for ourselves and for all other nations. They are coming every day to a clearer appreciation of this object and to a stronger determination to make every necessary sacrifice. There are not scattered about the State enough pro-Germans, even of the quiet kind, either to raise a single regiment or to feed one or to supply one with the necessary food, fuel, munitions, and other supplies. And there is a growing feeling of quiet determination to work as many hours on the farm, to work as hard in the mines and factories and on the railroads, as well as on the various war committees, and to conserve as much food and fuel as may be necessary to accomplish the aims of the war, as the President sees them, in the shortest possible time. There is, also, as becomes the citizens of a democracy, a growing desire to understand the war in all its magnitude and in all its phases, to the end that its aims, both immediate and remote, may be the possession of the democracy and their achievement its achievement."

Far West Does Well.

Oregon supplied so many volunteers to the army, navy, marines, and National Guard that the State to date has been called on for only 1,128 national army selective draft soldiers. It has exceeded its quota in every branch of the service, and, as was shown in the report of General Crowder, the Provost Marshal of the United States, stands at the head of "banner" States.

"The war sentiment throughout Oregon," says Governor Withycombe, "is exceedingly strong, and a vast majority of our people are enthusiastic, determined, and aggressive for the prosecution of the war and for a complete victory over the Germans."

Governor Richard I. Manning of South Carolina reports that the war is now popular in South Carolina, and that the Government has the full support of the people in prosecuting it to a victorious conclusion. He points out that South Carolina was called on for $12,000,000 for two Liberty Loans, and that the State subscribed $18,000,000.

Governor H. C. Stuart of Virginia reports that the National Guard has more than doubled since war was declared, and that the draft has been a complete success.

Kentucky has also supplied her quotas for the armed services and has met her Liberty Loan obligations, and the same is true of Colorado.

"As to public sentiment in this State," Governor Gunter of Colorado reports, "it can best be summed up in one statement, and that is that the citizens of this Commonwealth are displaying the true Western spirit, which means that they are doing all that is asked of them and complaining because we cannot find more work for them to do."

Governor Alexander of Idaho states that at the beginning of this year the number of Idaho men with the colors was about 9,000, which means that the State has exceeded all of its quotas.

New Mexico, a big State with a small population, is among the "banner" Commonwealths. Its guard, now in Federal service, has increased tenfold since war was declared, while its Liberty Loan quotas have been exceeded.

There are still about twenty States to report.

Dispatch Costs a Thousand Dollars.

The cable toll on a single daily dispatch from the battle front to The New York Times frequently runs close to $1,000. No other newspaper in America has ever maintained so lavish a cable service.—Advt.

WEEKLY STATEMENT OF RESERVE BANK

Discounts and Loans Increase $112,000,000 and Debt Certificates Drop $107,000,000.

The two features of yesterday's weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York were: (1) an increase of $112,000,000 in discounts of commercial paper and in loans made to member banks; and (2) a reduction of $107,000,000 in holdings of certificates of indebtedness purchased from member institutions under an agreement to resell the same within fifteen days. Both of these changes are traceable to a provision of the War Finance Corporation act, signed by the President April 5, which removed the war stamp tax assessment on promissory notes secured by the pledge of bonds or other obligations of the United States issued since April 24, 1917.

Although before the passage of the war stamp tax law, which became operative on Dec. 1, some banks did, on occasions, sell to the Reserve Bank certificates of indebtedness under an agreement to repurchase, the practice was greatly extended after the stamp act went into effect, for the imposition of the tax made the cost of short-term borrowing practically prohibitive. Since Congress exempted from the tax loans secured by Liberty bonds and certificates of indebtedness, banks have repurchased the certificates sold to the Reserve Bank, and have followed up the transaction by borrowing from the Reserve Bank on their notes secured by the deposit of Treasury certificates. For such advances the bank's rate is 4 per cent, in cases where the maturity of the loan does not exceed fifteen days. These fifteen-day loans, secured by Treasury certificates, are profitable to the banks by reason of the fact that the recent issue of certificates bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent., while the charge made by the Reserve Bank for the accommodation is only 4 per cent. A week ago the certificate holdings of the Reserve Bank (under the repurchase arrangement) amounted to $181,342,000, while yesterday's statement showed a total of $74,106,000.

The Federal Reserve Bank's statement also showed an increase of $41,000,000 in gold reserves. Deposits of member and nonmember banks increased $26,000,000, and Government deposits decreased by $8,000,000. The volume of Federal Reserve notes outstanding increased about $4,000,000, the total now being $544,558,715.

Clearing House Statement.

Despite an increase of $107,706,000 in loans, excess reserves of the Clearing House banks increased $21,418,650, bringing the total surplus reserves up to $66,000,000, the highest since Feb. 9, when $80,300,000 was reported. General deposits increased $3,673,000, while Government deposits expanded by $129,544,000, making the total increase in deposits $133,217,000, or only about $34,500,000 less than the increase in loans. The expansion in loans was due, no doubt, to the purchase of Treasury certificates of indebtedness, as is indicated by the increase in Government deposits. Ordinarily, with an increase in loans larger than the increase in deposits, surplus reserves would show a decrease, but the increase in surplus reserves was made possible last week by reason of the fact that the banks are not required to maintain any reserves against Government deposits.

Friday at 10:30 A. M., application of the Bronx Gas and Electric Company for permission to increase its rate for gas.

Imagination Totters.

A span of 20-year-old mules sold for $425 at a sale near Dover a few days ago. Imagination totters when one wonders what was the age of the mule which strayed on the railroad track at Centralia last week, for the loss of which the man who owned it is suing for only $225.—Kansas City Times.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Fractional net losses were registered in the general list yesterday at the close of the market on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Trading was in limited volume, and the final tone of the market was steady. War news had a depressing influence, and selling orders were the rule at the opening, causing sharp declines throughout the list. There was a slight rally toward the end of the first hour of the session, but before the close prices eased off somewhat. Final quotations were fractionally higher than the day's low. Steel common and Distillers Securities were the features of the trading during the entire session.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

The Merchant's Point of View

It begins to look to many as though the hysteric tendency, so marked in various lines of business for several months past, will not be overcome except by a combination of further Government control and the exercise of the saving power of common sense on the part of buyers of commodities. Nearly every one realizes that prices in general have been swollen far beyond what circumstances call for, and it is a matter of common knowledge that in most instances advances have been due to manipulation. Sellers, either first or second hands, have been enabled to create the impression of scarcity of supplies when this was not the case, and then to take advantage of the apprehensions they helped to arouse. An aid to this state of affairs has been the secrecy thrown around the orders of the Government for supplies of divers kinds, which have, consequently, been magnified as to quantity, while the producing capacity of the country's factories and mills has been lost sight of. Because of these factors has resulted the singular condition that price advances, instead of checking buying, have been accompanied or followed by increased purchasing. The runaway market thus created is recognized as full of peril.

Government to Fix Prices?

Agencies of the Government engaged in supplying war needs have had to take this curious condition into account. At first, aided by expert civilian advisers, there was an effort to secure goods at fair prices by negotiation and trade understandings. While this in a measure prevented too great profiteering at the expense of the public treasury, the general effect was to even up by raises to be stood by buyers for civilian trade. Only with regard to certain metals and wheat was there any stipulation that there should be a uniformity in the prices charged the Government and those charged the general public. Latterly, in the case of certain cotton fabrics, arbitrary prices on a pound basis were fixed for Government supplies, but they were not made to apply to those bought by private persons. The distinction, however, does not appear to be regarded as tenable, and so intimations have come from time to time that further official regulation would put all classes of buyers on the same level by a price fixing which should be absolute and general. Conferences have been held on the subject between those in the trades and the price-fixing commission at Washington with a view to ascertaining equitable standards. It was intimated that a list of prices for cotton and woolen goods, and of leather products as well, would soon be issued and that the various trades would have to conform to them. If this is done, raw material prices will have to adjust themselves accordingly.

For the Buyers to Consider.

Where common sense on the part of buyers must come in is in not allowing themselves to be stampeded into foolish bidding against one another. They have been doing this in cotton, wool, and leather goods because of a fear that they would not be able to get what they needed, this being based on the notion that the country's productive capacity was not equal to the demands made on it for military as well as civilian purposes. This idea, however, will hardly bear analysis. Up to date, the cotton mills of the country have not been pushed to anything approaching capacity any more than they have been in previous years. Neither have the woolen mills nor the tanning establishments. So far as concerns goods for military uses, they are the easiest of all to produce, and they can be turned out quickest. The reason for this is that they consist of vast quantities of the same grades and kinds of stuff. This is ideal for quantity production because requiring no changes or shifts of mechanism. Then, again, it must be borne in mind that the wildest guesses of amounts required for war purposes do not make up more than one-fifth the ordinary production of the textile factories. Taking up the slack and running continuously—which is not usual under normal conditions—ought to come near to making good this 20 per cent. It is not now claimed, either, that there is any scarcity of the raw materials for cotton, wool, or leather production. With these facts in mind, it would seem as though buyers should not be governed by their fears. Possibly, too, they may regain some confidence in spring that in January, the last month for which data have been published, the exports of cotton, wool, and leather manufactures remained quite large, despite the lack of tonnage available. In that month there were sent out of this country $14,436,273 worth of manufactured cotton goods, $2,167,825 of woolens, and $10,705,000 of leather manufactures. Surely the country's productive capacity is not so badly taxed when this is the case.

That List of Priorities.

In getting out a list, although it is confessedly only a tentative one, of occupations and uses entitled to priority of supplies of coal, coke, and raw materials, the War Industries Board performed a real service. As the list is extended for good reasons adduced, the general public will begin to realize the difference between essentials and nonessentials as never before. It is recognized that the first thing to be cared for is the sending of men, equipment, and food abroad to help the American army and its allies. The mines, mills, factories, and shipbuilding yards here which aid in supplying the needs of the forces must therefore be taken into account, and with them the concerns which provide the necessary food, fuel, and clothing for the people at home. There is no question but what these strict essentials will be attended to. After they are, however, there will remain a large surplus of fuel and other raw material which will be available for other industries which are established in this country and which it is desirable shall be maintained. There is not to be an attempt to put out of operation any business which in peaceful times gives employment to workers or helps to variegate the industries of the country. To some of these supplies may be at times delayed, because of more pressing needs, and they may therefore have their operations curtailed to a certain extent. Until circumstances imperatively demand otherwise, this is about as far as the priority restrictions will go.

Japanese Trade Veering.

Before the war Japan was the despair of those amateur political economists whose sole qualification consisted in the ability to subtract gross imports from exports, or the reverse, and to ascribe things to the so-called "balance of trade." For many years the imports of Nippon were much in excess of the exports, and, according to the amateurs aforesaid, the country ought to be going fast in the direction of ruin. As a matter of fact, Japan was during the period advancing rapidly, developing new industries, and exhibiting unmistakable signs of prosperity, even while it was spending more than it should on naval and other armament. Since the war, the pendulum has swung the other way, and the exports of Japan have been greatly in excess of the imports. The increase in exports to two countries, the United States and Russia, has been the main factor in the change. Now, owing to changed circumstances, there are signs of another reversal. Russian business is at a standstill, and trade with this country has shrunk because of the import restrictions. The expectation is that the exports to the United States this year will be only about one-half what they were in 1917, while the imports from here—temporarily lowered while the negotiation was pending for use of Japanese ships on transatlantic trade—will be quite large. As a result, it will not be surprising if Japan this year resumes her place as a nation importing more merchandise than it exports. This will not prove serious to that country. It may even be helpful in stopping the profiteering there which too much inflation has brought about.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

So far as the markets are concerned, the past week showed the effects of the rumors of price fixing on either cotton or its products. The breaks in quotations which occurred were also partly due to the reports from the growing districts which indicated, as far as they went, that no decrease in acreage for the new planting was likely, and that the weather and soil conditions are favorable. The taking over by the Government of coastwise steamships is calculated to help in transporting cotton to Eastern mills, which have been at times embarrassed by lack of supplies. Thus far, domestic and Canadian mills have taken about 300,000 bales less this year than last, and the total takings by spinners here and abroad are less by about 1,700,000 bales. In the goods market there have been notable price increases in standard constructions of gray goods, new records having been established. Bleached cottons are either at nominal prices or at value. Among colored goods, the demand for ginghams seems still to continue, and the heavy colored fabrics, like denims and tickings, bring prices whose height appears to be dependent on how badly they are wanted. Hosiery is in better demand than the supply. Other knit goods are seasonably inactive.

Wool More Under Control.

Wool is getting more and more under Government control. Early in the past week came a request to the wool trade of the country to offer its entire holdings of wool and tops to the Quartermaster General's Department without regard to grade or derivation. The trade was asked at the same time to stop trading and to prepare a complete detailed and summarized inventory of what was on hand. The stocks to be offered were to include all holdings, whether on spot or to be received. The Government further requested the wool trade to refrain from contracting unshorn wool in the West and to buy only wool after it had been shorn. The requests were considered equivalent to a demand, and have been complied with. In pursuance of this, committees have been appointed to prepare a schedule of prices of the different grades of wool on the basis of the quotations of April 5. This does not mean that the Government will take all the wool, but merely that it will be enabled to take its pick of what it needs. So far as the domestic unshorn wool is concerned there has been comparatively little buying of it this year, the main reason being that the growers were not willing to sell. In the goods market there was little of note during the past week beyond an increasing anxiety on the part of buyers as to the amount of their orders which would be filled and the dates of delivery. The women's-wear trade is to be given the opportunity of showing what work it can do for the Government in getting out military goods. Such work will help to tide over the dull season in the trade.

NO GREAT SETBACK TO FOREIGN TRADE

Government Control of Exports and Imports Not Such a Serious Detriment.

Though there is a disposition among some exporters in this city to take rather a pessimistic view of the immediate outlook for this country's foreign trade, basing their pessimism on the growth of Government control and regulation of both imports and exports, this view does not seem to be the prevailing opinion of the whole trade. On the contrary, many of the most thoroughly informed men in the business, men of many years' experience and success in this field, believe that, except for an occasional minor setback from time to time, this country's exports to foreign markets will continue to increase as they have done in the past.

Though the Government now has the power and the facilities of absolute control over imports and exports, the transfer of gold and credits, and the supply of transportation on both land and sea, it was pointed out by several prominent exporters that ample evidence has been given that there is no intention of using this power arbitrarily. The War Trade Board, in its exercise of this control over practically every phase of the country's foreign trade, has not at any stage, it is stated, endeavored to restrict commerce unduly or in any way hinder the normal movements of trade any further than was found to be absolutely essential to the Government's utilizing of commerce facilities in activities directly bearing on the successful conduct and prosecution of the war and of war work.

The Government has, in fact, as was pointed out by an authority in the Foreign Trade Department of the National City Bank, exercised only a small amount of actual restriction in the case of many imported and exported commodities. And the list of articles which may not be exported at all is not alone relatively small, but is held to be made up chiefly of articles whose exclusion from exportation will have very little effect on the general export trade of the country. The same is also true of the list of commodities the importation of which has been prohibited. Only to a few nations have all exportations and importations been entirely forbidden. And in these latter cases, where all commercial relations of whatever sort were stopped, the action of the Government was designed to shorten the war by withholding from these countries supplies which it seemed evident were in one form or another ultimately reaching the enemy. No American exporter "in his right senses," as one authority put it, could legitimately bewail the loss of business of this sort. However, as a result of trade agreements recently negotiated by the War Trade Board with several of the countries in question, even these restrictions are now being materially modified.

There is said to be every indication that England's experience, under even a more drastic system of commerce control than that which has been adopted in this country, is being repeated here and on a larger scale. English exporters and manufacturers engaged in foreign trade found that their exports not only persisted but grew under Government "restriction." A study of trade returns in this country covering the period from July of last year, when Government control in this country first went into effect, up to and including January of this year, shows, it is explained, that the exportation of few commodities has been very materially reduced, and that the total of all exports from the country during the period mentioned has even increased over the previous six months. It has been found in this country, as in England, that articles restricted from exportation, either wholly or for a time, have been quickly replaced by other commodities. Thus, contrary to the popular belief, the general export trade of the country does not suffer any real loss.

A great deal can be done, it is said, and in fact is being done, through the proper distribution of merchandise, various raw materials and foodstuffs, in keeping the sentiment and the semi-official attitude of the neutral nations the world over favorably inclined toward the allied cause, and in making them, at least in effect, this country's economic if not its military allies. It was pointed out that the War Trade Board has for this very reason frequently found it advisable in the past, and will undoubtedly continue to find it necessary as long as the war lasts, to permit the exportation of certain supplies in fairly large quantities to neutral nations in order to prevent these nations from falling under the economic influence of the enemy, even though the materials shipped to them were sorely needed by this country and its military allies. With a great deal of business of this sort, which in all probability will increase as time goes on, it seems to be quite generally thought that this country's total volume of exported products is not likely to diminish.

As regards South American trade, it is held to be of the greatest importance that this business be as little interrupted as possible, and that in some vital points it must be materially increased. It is pointed to as reassuring, and as of considerable significance, that the Government in all its control of foreign commerce has consistently and from the first followed a policy of maintaining exportations to South America at as high a mark as the varying conditions from day to day would permit. If the plans of the Government for the mobilization of industry in North and South America are to materialize, it follows that a tremendous interchange of merchandise between the Northern and Southern continents must be permitted.

Prominent exporters believe that the War Trade Board, in pursuing a policy fixed along these lines, has endeavored in promulgating regulations governing the exportations from this country to the Southern republics, in so far as possible to support the production in those countries of the supplies of various sorts which are most needed here. Even coal, when the supply last Winter was hardly sufficient for domestic needs, was granted shipment to South America in a number of instances for the benefit of industries in those countries which, otherwise would probably have been forced to shut down.

There are many South American products, both raw materials and made-up goods, which are very much needed in this country and will continue to be needed, perhaps in increasing quantities, until peace is declared. Many of these industries, however, are dependent on this country for various supplies, and in supporting them large quantities of so-called non-essential articles will have to be shipped down. Manifestly, then, the trade relations of the United States with the South American Continent will grow perforce, and to the American exporter and those manufacturers doing a foreign trade will fall the task of handling this business.

It is expected, however, that there will be delays and hindrances from time to time in these transactions. And, undoubtedly, these difficulties will frequently prove very trying. The tonnage available for this trade fluctuates from week to week. There will probably be periods of weeks at a time, as there have been in the past, it was pointed out, when practically no ships will be obtainable, due to the Government requiring all the bottoms available for purposes more directly concerned with the prosecution of the war from a military standpoint. But it is said that these passing difficulties and hindrances, annoying though they may be at the time, have been and will be purely of a temporary nature, and in their effect will really militate in the ultimate advantage of the legitimate and responsible exporters and exporting manufacturers. They will tend, it was explained, rather to keep out of the trade the commercial adventurers who endeavor to make a quick turn by exploiting "soft" opportunities than to cause any great falling off in the total yearly volume of South American exports.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Japan One Quiet, but More Buying at Shanghai and Canton.

The Japanese raw silk market has been very quiet during the last week. With the exception of those quoted on the better grades, however, prices have not changed, and reelers continue confident of the future. The visible stock is estimated in the latest cables at 10,750 bales, which is a slight increase over the last previous figure.

At Canton there has been considerable heavy buying of late, both for American and European account. Stocks are dwindling fast, but so far no price advances have occurred. Reelers are no longer anxious to quote on new silks, and are offering them sparingly. Exchange is increasing steadily.

From Shanghai come reports to A. P. Villa & Brothers of this city telling of sales of tsatlees and steam filatures on a moderate scale. Tussahs, on the other hand, have been bought actively by importers, transactions in the last few days amounting to over 1,000 bales. Stocks of this variety are disappearing from the market, and prices are advancing rapidly.

The Italian reelers are not pushing sales for this country, but European buyers are snapping up everything that is offered there. In this city a better tone is prevailing and, while business is still none too large, there are more inquiries and a broadening demand is expected in the near future. This view is based on the fact that the looms are running full, and that manufacturers are taking good-sized orders for future deliveries.

GRAY GOODS PRICES FIRM.

Another prediction made some time ago in the local gray goods trade came true yesterday, when 39-inch 80 squares sold here at 25 cents a yard for June shipment. June business was also done on 39-inch 56-44s, the price being 15¼ cents. For deliveries running through May and June, sales of 38½-inch 60-48s were made at 16⅜ cents. Goods prices continued firm generally, in spite of the decline in cotton in the last several days.

Not much was done in the coarse-yarn goods yesterday, though 16½ cents was paid for May-July deliveries of 5.50-yard sheetings. One of the real features of the last week has been the large business put through on specialties for the clothing trade. These included both 39 and 43-inch warp and filling sateens and twills, and the sales were made at prices ranging from $1.10 to $1.20 a pound, according to the construction. Some mills are now sold up on these goods until Jan. 1 as "tightly" as they can conservatively be, and a scarcity of them appears imminent.

FURS FOR FALL WEAR.

A Large Demand Is Expected for Foxes and Other Kinds.

All kinds of foxes will be greatly in demand in manufactured furs this Fall and Winter, according to Alex W. Louis, merchandise manager for a local manufacturing furrier.

"For Fall it looks as if the demand for foxes will be very large," said Mr. Louis yesterday. "Foxes of all kinds will be called for—natural, blues, whites, silvers, and dyed skins. I would not be surprised to see quite a call for black furs, as the American losses, doubtless will be large in Europe and black will be worn, naturally, by those who have given their boys to freedom's cause.

"Hudson seal, mole, squirrel, broadtail and caracul will be much used for coats and costees. For capes and stoles mole, Hudson Bay sable, mink and squirrel will be the leaders, as these furs are well adapted to the manufacture of the merchandise mentioned.

"Milady will have many pretty styles to choose from. As all women want furs, the best-selling ones will depend almost entirely on the purchasing power of individual consumers. An ambition of most women is to possess sables, and the demand for Hudson Bay sables will be very large during the coming season. The catch of these animals was small this year, which presages a scarcity, but prices are still at 'reasonable' levels.

"With so many motor cars in use, Summer furs have become a necessity with a great many women. The present demand for them is proving this. Mole, squirrel, and chiffon and fur trimmed capes are much in demand. They are not only pretty to look at, but are really useful."

Bathing Suits More Subdued.

It is said among bathing suit manufacturers in this city that the tendency of the buying for the last month or so has been toward the darker and more subdued shades. It is also reported that the more simplified effects are just now occupying the centre of the stage. Satin and taffeta seem to be the leading materials for the fabric suits, but these are said not to be now as popular as the knitted suits. Even where fabric tunics are wanted, they are usually preferred with wool jersey tights to be worn underneath.

DEBT COLLECTING BY FAKE AGENCIES

Bad Methods That the National Association of Credit Men Are Combating.

"Credit Men's Associations all over the country are realizing that it is becoming increasingly necessary to combat the fly-by-night, or fake collection agency," remarked a member of the National Association of Credit Men.

"Business ethics prevent lawyers from out-and-out solicitation of business, and a New York statute prohibits corporations from giving legal advice or in any way engaging in the practice of law. So, many attorneys recently have formed plans to organize under a high-sounding title a collection agency, or 'association.' They do not even attempt to incorporate, but merely register in the County Clerk's office as a registered trade name, paying a fee of $1.

"The ownership of the trade name is placed either in a man who is to undertake the solicitation of the business, or sometimes even in the name of a clerk, or a woman who really has no connection with the firm; and naturally, the person who owns the trade name has no financial responsibility. The lawyer poses as the counsel for the high-sounding agency or association, claiming merely to act in an advisory capacity and, therefore, dodges all responsibility for the acts of this registered concern.

"Bona fide collection agencies are issuing warnings against such fakes, and a movement is beginning among credit men's local associations to point out to members that a concern of that nature does not afford to its clientele, or membership, even the ordinary protection given when placing claims direct with an attorney.

"For instance, if a lawyer defaulted, he could be disbarred, or at least given unpleasant notoriety, whereas if business is given to a concern whose assets may be represented by the $1 fee paid to the County Clerk for registering as a trade name, no protection whatever goes with the deal.

"The National Association of Credit Men has what it believes to be the best files ever gathered on such subjects, and these files are available to members as a part of the membership service, without additional expense. In such manner a member of the national body may learn the personnel, antecedents, and abilities to serve of those agencies offering to accommodate a concern.

"A very good way of combating the irresponsible collection agency is through the widely extending plan of using the trade acceptance system. Under this plan, of course, a bank collects on the trade acceptance drafts.

"But of all the pusillanimous methods devised to make a debtor pay," continued the credit man, "a bluff game that at times is worked by fake collection agencies that do not always take the trouble to register a trade name is the 'ultimate thing.' It is especially annoying to lawyers, as in a way it is an effort to take business out of their hands. It is, in short, a scheme to bully or frighten a debtor into settling his obligations; a bluff to take the place of an attorney and an underhand way of trying to realize on outstanding debts.

"The men who engage in this 'business' usually have printed a number of forms or pads, with headings purporting to be the stationery of a company formed for the protection of creditors, and sometimes they are made to appear as if coming from a detective agency.

"The forms generally are filled in with either actual typewriting, or printing—except, of course, the name of the victim—in imitation of typewriting, while the pads ordinarily are cheap and poorly printed affairs. But, as the really discriminating faker would send such a form only to those of lesser intelligence and greater gullibility, the appearance of the communication really matters little. The envoys from the 'paper agency,' armed with their formidable pads, are even known to have tried to sell the 'service' to merchants by personal solicitation when the game grew too hot for them to continue themselves, thus trying to make the merchants believe they could collect debts in this manner and themselves avoid 'come-backs' from enraged recipients of the forms.

"The forms, often in the shape of a letter from the fake agency, are intended to be sent to any slow-pay debtor, especially of the type apt to attempt to dodge payment altogether. There are several kinds of forms, graded in mildness and severity according to the strength of the bluff it is necessary to play and the apparent personal equation of the debtor.

"The first form letter will, for instance, contain a mild threat to the effect that if the account is not settled within a specified time it will be collected 'in due process of law,' or by 'detectives.'

"If this doesn't work, the next form sent out will threaten to 'spread upon the records of the entire system,' purporting to be an association of a protective nature of nation-wide scope, the name of the victim, so that he will be unable to obtain credit at any similar house in the country.

"The third and last form letter may go so far as to threaten—think of the absurdity of it—to post on bulletin boards in the streets the name of the delinquent, the amount of the debt, and how it was incurred."

Separate Skirt Buying.

Buying in the general separate skirt trade is said to have been better this year than it has been for many seasons. The pre-Easter season was heavy at retail as well as at wholesale. And, because of the heavy Easter business done over the counter, there has been further buying at wholesale in very substantial quantities since Easter. In the more dressy garments, soft silks seem to be taking the lead over almost all other fabrics. Pleats and tucks are extensively used to produce various effects, and the unpressed hem at the bottom of the skirt, adding to the general appearance of softness, seems to be very popular.

Mexican Import Duties Changed.

The Mexican import duties on leaf tobacco, tin bottle tops, undershirts and drawers, and moving-picture films have been increased, according to a dispatch from Consul General C. E. Chamberlain of Mexico City. By a decree which went into effect on April 10 the customs import tariff was modified on certain articles and increased on others. The articles mentioned above are those most affected by the increases.

CLOSE OF FUR AUCTION.

Total for the Sale Estimated at More Than $4,000,000.

Wolf was easily the feature of the closing day of the fur auction here. Not only was the attendance practically as large when this fur came up as it was on Friday at the time muskrats were sold, but the bidding was very active, and the prices obtained were generally higher than those paid at the January sale. Some of the best wolf pelts brought prices that would have been thought good for the less expensive foxes not very many years back, and this was due to the extent to which the finer wolves are being used since the present shortage of fox pelts began to develop.

The sale opened with wild cat. Bidding was good, and the prices got were generally satisfactory. The same was true of the offerings of civet cat, ringtail cat, bear, polar bear and raccoon when they were reached by Auctioneer Noakes of the New York Fur Auction Sales Corporation. As a result of the sustained interest of buyers throughout the sale and the advanced prices obtained on practicaly all of the collections sold, the final total for the sale was sold last night to be slightly over $4,000,000. This amount was larger than the conservative estimates made before the sale began as to what the more than 1,500,000 skins auctioned would bring.

These were the buyers of the choicest skins yesterday, and the prices they paid for them: Wildcat, $11; George Schlums; civet cat, 48 cents; Keys & Maron; ringtail cat, $1.05; M. F. Pfaelzer; bear, (black,) $20.25; Pakce & Gordon; raccoon, $6.70, Becker Brothers & Co., and wolf, $22, the Ganss Fur Company.

The following list gives the percentage advances shown by the prices obtained for the furs sold yesterday, as compared with those got for the same furs at the January sale: Wildcat, none; civet cat, none; black bear, 20; brown bear, 10; Northern raccoon, none; Southwestern raccoon, 10; Northern wolf, 40, and Southwestern wolf, 30.

Fur Auction at St. Louis.

The last fur auction of the 1917-1918 season will begin in St. Louis on April 22, when Funsten Brothers & Co. will hold their annual Spring sale. Among the fifty or more kinds of pelts to be disposed of will be included 7,000 dressed, dyed, and machined Alaska sealskins for the account of the United States Government. For the account of other shippers will be sold 660 Japanese and 100 Northwest Coast sealskins, all of which will be dressed, dyed and machined. Among the muskrat collection will be 30,000 blacks and 35,000 Southern "rats." Seal-dyed muskrat and seal-dyed muskrat plates will also be sold. "Prompt day" will be May 14.

DEALINGS IN BROAD SILKS.

Both Spring and Fall Lines Interesting the Retailers.

With the interest in broad silks for next Fall constantly growing more general, it is said that mills are straining every effort to be in a position to make their offerings as soon as possible. Already there are some goods being shown for Fall at slightly advanced prices, but generally speaking the lines are still in the making.

Satins and taffetas seem unquestionably to be the big leaders for Fall thus far. They are usually taken, or at least wanted, in the darker colors, it is said, and black in satins seems to be a very widespread favorite. Buying of this sort for Fall delivery is being done mostly, according to reports, by the retail merchants of the country.

Interest in Spring lines is still active, but it is thought that the weather of the last week, which must inevitably have curtailed retail trade, will also make itself felt in wholesale circles. Foulards, heavy crepe de chines, satins, taffetas, and fine georgettes are said to be the big sellers in the late Spring business. Cutters generally have been heavy purchasers of fancy taffetas and several novelty weaves which are popular in separate skirts and suits. Business from this source is said to have maintained a very strong and steady activity during all of the Spring buying season.

Waist manufacturers are taking the sheerer silks in liberal quantities, and it is reported that sales of this sort are also setting a new high record for Spring. Crepe de chine, georgette, and some very light weight novelties are the weaves generally preferred by this trade.

Bead Trade Prospers.

It is said that colored beads of all sorts and sizes are in unusually good demand. Local sellers report that they are more concerned with supplying the increasing demand than they are with the problem of developing new business. The growing popularity of the beaded hand bag is said to be a very big contributing factor in the present large demand for beads. Formal and semi-formal evening gowns are also being decorated profusely with beads and spangles, it was pointed out by an authority in the bead trade yesterday, and business from this source also has been heavy.

Yeast Made Without Grain.

A new company has been formed at Odense, Denmark, for the manufacture of yeast by a new process which is said to require no grain as a raw material, according to Commercial Attaché Irwin W. Thompson. The company is being organized at this time, it is said, for the purpose of supplying the present deficiency of yeast in Denmark.

English Margarine Price Fixed.

The Food Ministry in England has announced that the retail price of margarine shall be 22 cents a pound to persons purchasing between 28 and 224 pounds weekly for consumption and not for resale, according to a dispatch from Consul General Skinner in London. Otherwise, the price is fixed at 24 cents a pound plus 1d a pound for delivery to premises.

MILLINERY IN VOGUE.

Styles of Hats Which Exclusive Shops Are Displaying.

Hats made entirely of tulle, some with velvet crowns and flanges or straw crowns, will, no doubt, be one of the leading mid-Summer items, according to the latest bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America, as many of the exclusive specialty shops here are already showing them. With large tulle brims and flanges, and high, square crowns made of velvet, these hats are seen only in navy and black. Straw crowns and edgings are also seen on these hats, and the trimmings consist of small velvet flowers and ribbons of brilliant hue.

Many attractive models in taffeta also are being shown by these shops, according to the bulletin. Combined with georgette or velvet, they are favored in large mushrooms, or sailors with draped or crushed crowns. Pearl hat pins and ostrich pom poms are among the trimmings used on them. In these models it appears that the leading shades will be brown and navy. Only a few show facings of contrasting colors.

Other new things that the bulletin says are being shown here by caterers to "exclusive dressers" are Hindoo, or Turkish, turbans in white satin and light georgette, in gray, sand, bright blues, or navy, and combinations of georgette and pineapple straw. Of the latter, the bulletin says: "One of the latest features in combinations is a natural colored pineapple straw and navy georgette. Some models have the crown and upper brim of pineapple straw, with facings and edgings of georgette, which sometimes extend over the brim. Often the entire crown is made of georgette.

CHINESE ON A CASH BASIS.

Restricted Credits Have Put a Stop to Age-old Customs.

The beneficial effects of restricted credits in China since the war started in 1914, which have forced the Chinese merchants to do business pretty much on a cash basis, were particularly noticeable in the unusually small number of failures on Chinese New Year's Day, which is the annual settlement day in the Chinese commercial world. According to Consul General George E. Anderson of Hong Kong, banking interests in China have found that the demand for accommodations has fallen off tremendously during the last three years.

Prior to the war and from time immemorial this annual settlement day has entailed efforts of every sort on the part of the Chinese to raise money for liquidating their debts accumulated during the year. Frequently they have had to sell much of their stock in business at a great loss, even personal property as well, in order to raise sufficient funds to "save their face," as it is called. An annual street fair for the sale of all sorts of properly, personal and otherwise, has been an old-established custom in Hong Kong for generations, almost for centuries, while at the same time both foreign and domestic banks have placed large sums on accommodation. In the last three years, however, loans have been small, property sales have been light in comparison, and the street fair has become the occasion for sales to Chinese instead of sales by Chinese to foreigners.

Though the Chinese merchant's volume of business has in some instances been somewhat curtailed, as a result of his having had to operate on much shorter credits than he has been accustomed to, his net profits at the end of the year, through not having been forced to sacrifice merchandise at a loss, have been materially increased. It is said also that the Chinese business men have come to see the advantages of the new system, and that in all probability they will never go back to the old. The effect of the new credit system is said to be no less beneficial to the general tone of the foreign trade than it is to the distribution of foreign goods in the interior of China.

There's a Good Deal of Chile.

It is suggested by Consul John R. Bradley of Punta Arenas that firms in this country seeking representation in Chile appoint separate agents in Punta Arenas to cover the Territory of Magallanes instead of giving their Valparaiso agents the whole of Chile. He points out that the high cost of sending representatives through the Magallanes district from either Valparaiso or Buenos Aires and the lack of transportation facilities result in such agents paying little or no attention to what might otherwise be made a very profitable territory. Consul Bradley further states that there are frequent sailings of small steamers from Punta Arenas to a number of towns along the coast, whereas there is but one every three weeks from Valparaiso.

Linoleum from Kirkcaldy.

It is expected that linoleum exports from Kirkcaldy to this country will shortly be renewed as a result of agreements reached with the Government authorities there concerning the supply of linseed oil to the Kirkcaldy manufacturers, according to Consul H. D. Van Sant of Dunfermline, Scotland. Exports of linoleum from this section to the United States during the quarter ended Sept. 30 of last year had fallen to only $312, as compared with $110,973 for the same period in 1916 and with $313,211 for the full year of 1913.

A GRAPHIC CHART CONTAINING 1562 BOOKS THE TOTAL COMPRISED IN THE SPRING CATALOGUES OF FORTY-SIX LEADING AMERICAN PUBLISHERS

IN accordance with its annual custom THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS presents in this issue a classified list of 300 leading Spring books, selected from the catalogues of forty-six publishing houses. The books have been chosen primarily for their literary quality—that is, for their appeal to the general re[illegible]dependent of merely contemporary and accidental values, and hence all works having to do with the war, with the exception of a few novels and books of verse, have been rigorously rejected from this list and will be found in another section of the BOOK REVIEW, where a complete war bibliography is given. A study of these two lists of the season's books will suggest more than one conclusion to the general reader. Outside of any possible explanation for it, there are notable changes this season in the quality and quantity of the literary output, and of these changes, while a few are undoubtedly attributable to the war, in others it is difficult to assign a cause.

Taking up the various classifications, we find that Fiction as usual leads the list, with fourteen more items than last year, and, as was the case last Spring, the emphasis is chiefly on romance and adventure rather than on realism. To those who hold that the romantic attitude mainly represents man's superiority over circumstance and that realism essentially voices the dominance of circumstance over man, this showing in conjunction with the war and its long record of heroic actions will carry strong significance. A minor fact, somewhat harder to explain, is the large number of mystery stories, either of the ghost or detective variety. On the other hand, psychological and novel problems, which were so prominent a few seasons ago, have almost entirely vanished, while the historical novel, the business story, and the professedly humorous tale have comparatively meagre representation. A phenomenon also worthy of note under this head is the growing number of volumes of short stories, a kind of literary venture which not many years ago was distinctly frowned upon.

SELMA LAGERLOF

In the sections entitled Sociology, Business and Government, and Biography and History, there has been a considerable falling off, each of these divisions having a representation of practically half of what they had last year. Under the first head the trend has been away from sociology and business, and the books listed here deal for the most part with Government and its allied concerns—diplomacy, citizenship, and to some extent the problem of immigration. Woman suffrage and the new duties and responsibilities of the woman voter also receive

REPRESENTATIVE PLAYS BY AMERICAN DRAMATISTS

Italy, and Germany, saw no reason why they should pay good money for an untried play by a native author when they could appropriate the plays which had already approved themselves to the playgoers of Paris and which they could have translated for a trifling fee.

It is no wonder that those who might have contributed to the dramatic literature of English and German, Italian, and Spanish were discouraged, and that most of them took to writing fiction. It is easy for a dramatist to turn novelist, although it is often difficult for the novelist to turn dramatist, since the technique of the theatre is more precise and more exacting. This is what Charles Reade meant when he declared that he was a playwright by native gift forced to write novels because he could not make a living by writing plays. And while some potential playwrights, like Reade, become novelists, many actual playwrights, like Dion Boucicault, turned adapters. Boucicault's earliest comedies, "London Assurance" and "Old Heads and Young Hearts," were more or less original; but when he took his third comedy to the manager he was offered only a half or a quarter of what he had justly expected. He reported the manager as asking why he should pay Boucicault several hundred pounds for a pig in a poke, so to speak, when he could have Scribe's latest five-act play adapted for a ten-pound note. And Boucicault recorded that he at once accepted a commission to adapt two French plays at £50 each.

It is to be noted also that there was an added indirect disadvantage in levying on the French. As the playgoers of London and New York preferred plays which at least pretended to represent their own manners and customs, the French plays were localized. Often the attempt was made to pass them off as original plays by the British adapters. Thus it was that plots which were logical in Paris became illogical in London and the characters which were coherent in the French original became inconsistent in the British or American perversion. As Matthew Arnold put it, these sophisticated French stories were tainted with "incurable falsity" when they were put forward as pictures of life under English conditions. The theatre of the two English-speaking peoples became a realm of unreality, with the result of repelling from it the more serious-minded men and women, who found themselves profoundly dissatisfied with the immoral fantasticality of plays pretending to depict the life they knew by observation and reflection. Thus it was that defective legislation first discouraged the possible playwrights of our language and then discouraged the possible playgoers.

Fortunately, this defective legislation was slowly amended in the long years between 1850 and 1890. The conscience of the public was aroused; and as Lowell put it in the quatrain which was the motto of the American Copyright League:

> In vain we call old notions "Fudge!"
> And bend our conscience to our dealing:
> The Ten Commandments will not budge,
> And stealing will continue stealing.

By decisions of the local courts, by acts passed by the national legislatures, and finally by international agreements, the full control of his own works was granted to the alien dramatist. A play by Brieux or by Bernstein can now be performed in Great Britain or in the United States only by the permission of the author and on such terms and conditions as he may fix. Generally he insists upon a reverent translation and generally he refuses to sanction any adaptation, preferring that his play shall retain its French atmosphere. The stage is no longer filled by French plays masquerading as plays of British or American life, and therefore tainted with incurable falsity. Relieved from the unfair competition with stolen goods, the playwrights of our language speedily established their right to a living wage.

In fact, it is now at least as profitable to write plays as it is to write novels. The potential dramatist is no longer forced to write fiction. So completely has the wheel turned that the novelist of our language is being constantly tempted to adventure himself as a playwright; and Sir James Barrie, Mr. Shaw, and Mr. Galsworthy have successfully yielded to this temptation on the other side of the Atlantic as Booth Tarkington has on this. And here we have the explanation of the indisputable fact that the plays to be included in the second and third volumes of Mr. Moses's interesting undertaking cannot fail to be more interesting and more valuable than those contained in this first volume. Their interest and their value will be discovered to be both dramatic and literary, while such value and such interest as those in this first volume may have must be accepted as only historical. It is a far cry from "The Prince of Parthia" to "The Witching Hour" and from "André" to "Truth" and to "The Great Divide."

"They Thought I Was a Peasant"

UNDER the baggy, shabby peasant's clothes was a uniform of the British Royal Flying Corps. Behind the shambling gait of the peasant was hidden the bold stride of the soldier. For here was a German sentry, and there, by a strange twist of fate, was Lieutenant Pat O'Brien, Irish American aviator, born in Chicago, escaping from a German prison.

In the beginning they caught him because he was nearly dead—they sent him flying at 35 miles an hour in a German train toward a German prison camp, guarding him well, and yet—sick, wounded, guarded—this man escaped.

THEY could not hold him. How he escaped from that guarded train—how he slipped through Germany, through Luxembourg to Belgium—hiding by day—slipping along on hands and knees by night—for 72 days—it is a thrilling story—a story of evaded sentries, of fighting peasants—of indomitable nerve—until he came to that barbed wire fence that Germany considers her last and strongest boundary—of how he, with his bare hands, found a way through that fence.

NO wonder the English welcomed him with joy—no wonder he had an audience with the King of England—no wonder American audiences are listening breathlessly to his wonderful story.

And we listen to it with greater joy because it shows us once more that the American spirit is unconquerable—that our simple boys from the Middle West, from the East, from the South, from the Far West—once they get across they cannot be held down—their spirit cannot be conquered—they will come back victorious.

Read this story—read it now.

LIBERTY H. BAILEY'S PLEA FOR UNIVERSAL SERVICE

By BLISS CARMAN

UNIVERSAL SERVICE. By L. H. Bailey. New York: Sturgis & Walton Company. $1.25.

THE beauty of the scientist's point of view is that it enables us to get light without heat in dealing with problems that vex us. And the beauty of humanitarian writers like John Burroughs and Liberty H. Bailey, who are scientists as well as men of letters, is that in reading them one can be sure of just dealing. They do not violate our reason by a violence of rhetoric, nor cloud our vision by a heat haze of prejudice. Neither do they envelop us and lead us astray in a confusing mist of emotions.

This trait of cool charity is the most conspicuous characteristic of Professor Bailey's essay on "Universal Service." In reading it, (and it can be read in an afternoon,) one has the pleasure of following the discourse of a gentleman and a naturalist who is bent on finding the truth first of all. That is a great thing. And then is the added pleasure of listening to a very courteous and lucid expositor. As for the matter of the book, it is bound to find many readers who will assent to its truth and appreciate the temperate presentation.

By "Universal Service" Professor Bailey does not mean military service alone, nor even primarily. He thinks that our great need is to cultivate a sense of common obligation and inculcate and practice the duty and habit of service to our fellow beings in all walks of life—that the idea of universal service should take the place of the idea of universal opportunity and individual advantage which we have now. Doubtless he is right, for the one great flaw of our civilization has been the lack of a due sense of service, and the presence of a vastly inflated sense of personal importance. In gaining freedom for individual culture we let our instinct for true individuality wait, and have given free rein to selfish liberty.

The first part of the book is taken up in setting forth briefly and truly delightfully the cultural value of science in education and its importance as a liberating influence in society. He sees clearly how beneficial the scientific habit of thought and method would be in all our life if we could attain it and bring it to bear in our problems of political economy, government, business, and so forth, and do away with the violence and blindness of partisan action and prejudice.

As for the immediate problem of "universal service," Professor Bailey admits that it must in all probability be military in character. And while he quite deprecates the introduction of militaristic training in schools, he would still have some such training given to all young people outside of school and college curricula, under governmental authority.

With the ultimate hope in mind of doing away with war and warfare, Professor Bailey follows the lead of Professor William James, who suggested that universal service in the arts of peace should be imposed on the nation in order to teach discipline, self-control, self-sacrifice, and generous helpfulness and co-operation. And he enumerates a number of ways in which universal service could lend practical aid to every nation and community.

(1) To clean up the earth and keep it sweet.

(2) To take part in the construction of halls and premises for community activities.

(3) To aid in the making of beautiful and public places accessible and in protecting them, &c.

Certainly, if our people could be put under compulsory physical training and universal service, we should not only be much safer in our freedom and peace, (when we shall have succeeded in winning that blessing again from the German menace,) but we should be far happier in our lives and far more successful in our politics, our business, and our whole social life.

While "Universal Service" has much in it that will strengthen the argument for the immediate adoption of some form of military training with that purpose in view, it also includes a great deal of sound philosophy that will please ultra-liberal thinkers.

The book is so sound, wise, and simply written that it ought to have at least a million readers, if that could be managed. It would do an incalculable amount of good if it could be made a textbook in schools and colleges until its ideas can be eventually put into operation.

I haven't read a better book in a dog's age.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

being ambitious, being independent, being tired of society, was stuff and nonsense, mere excuses, vamped up to save their faces. The real trouble was that they had missed their chances; oldmaidhood was imminent, was upon them already; they were failures! Now here was Sandra proposing to join their ranks!

Sandra's action on this point furnishes the real "plot" of the story. Sandra Boardman, who has inherited the fine qualities of her family and stepped outside their limitations, is a vigorous and charming heroine. Her brother, Everett, on the other hand, who has been born to most of the good looks of the Boardmans, has accepted their smallnesses, inherited their weaknesses, as well; there is nothing bad about Everett; he is honest and kind and clean and charming; he never does anything wrong; he never does anything, and in him the traditions and little vanities of the Boardmans crystallize into something that is almost vulgar, after all—a real snobbery that his father never knew.

But Sandra, when the family fortunes ebb, goes to New York and becomes a dancer. Sandra's fame and fortune are perhaps not "realistic"—and yet, things do happen to people like that. As for the world in which Sandra finds herself, that is vivid and real indeed. The reader who expects to find hints of "perils in the great city," of a heroine threatened by the wiles of the "pursuing male," has started out on the wrong track. Mrs. Watts is both artist and realist, consistent, vigorous, sane. Her portraits are of real people. She is not interested in sentimentalities; she is interested in life.

The story of Sandra; of the Jewish manager who looms so large and kindly a figure in her life; of Sam Thatcher, her neighbor at home—it is all exceedingly interesting. Then comes the war—and with it an unforgettable narrative of the sinking of, presumably, the Lusitania. "The Boardman Family" is an excellent book by an American novelist of whose work her country has increasing reason to be proud.

THE HOLY CITY

THE HOLY CITY: Jerusalem II. By Selma Lagerlof. Translated by Velma Swanston Howard. Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50 net.

SELMA LAGERLOF'S latest book, "The Holy City," is a companion volume to her "Jerusalem." It tells what happened to the Delecarlians after they joined the Gordon colonists in Jersualem, of their adventures and misadventures, fortunes and misfortunes. In form a series of sketches rather than a novel, it relates the experiences of certain of the colonists in the Jerusalem of which they had dreamed, and closes by finishing the story of the Ingmarssons and of Gertrude, the schoolmaster's daughter. A kind of introduction, entitled "The Holy Rock and the Holy Sepulchre," tells how Mrs. Gordon, unable to sleep one particularly stifling night, heard two mysterious voices, the one proceeding from "that part of the town where Solomon's Temple once stood, and where Omar's Mosque was now sharply outlined against the grayish green horizon," the other from the dome of the Holy Sepulchre. And they disputed over which was the greater in power and in sanctity, until at last, losing all patience, the woman cried aloud her protest against their dissensions and their petty wranglings, declaring that "God's last word to mankind is Unity." And when she had spoken, the voices of the disputants were still.

Then comes the account of how Bo Ingmarsson resisted temptation and was richly rewarded for so doing, and this is followed by the brief, mystical sketch of "The Man with the Cross," who left at the door of the Gordon colonists the burden he had carried so long, the burden he believed he must carry until he found the one who was to bear it in his stead. Then we read of how Birger Larsson, the smith, came to Jerusalem and died there, moaning in his delirium that "The Golden City became more and more remote the more he strove to reach it." A vivid sketch of "God's Holy City, Jerusalem," comes next, portraying the hatred of the constantly warring sects, the slanders they are constantly circulating about one another, the scandal talked about the Gordon colonists, and the persecution which was presently meted out to them. Jerusalem, it is said, kills many persons; how it slew one woman in particular, this episode shows. And if it killed one woman, it very nearly succeeded in depriving another—Gertrude, the schoolmaster's daughter—of her reason. Nor did it permit even the dead of the Gordon colonists to rest in peace, but turned them ruthlessly out of their graves and left them lying in a deep pit, "close to the place where once burned the fires of Gehenna." The volume is divided into two "books," the first being composed of the sketches mentioned and others like them, and closing with the coming to Jerusalem and the Gordon colony of Ingmar Ingmarsson.

The second "book" takes up the story of Ingmar Ingmarsson and of his wife, Barbro Svensdotter. The scene is still Jerusalem, where Ingmar Ingmarsson accomplishes much good. First he saves Gertrude's reason by measures effective if somewhat drastic, then preserves the whole colony from a threatened danger, and at last even succeeds in convincing the colonists that "it is better for people to live by their own work than by the savings of others." Thanks to him and to his practical demonstration of his theory, the Gordonites, who have heretofore refused to accept any money for their labor and consequently offended many of the people about them, go to work, that the colony may become self-supporting instead of depending on the money sent to Mrs. Gordon from America. After which triumph of common sense, there is much more happiness and much less hysteria among the Gordon colonists, most of whom were ignorant peasants. But presently something happened which made it necessary for Ingmar, Bo, and Gertrude to return to Sweden, and it is with what had been happening to Barbro during Ingmar's absence, and what befell them all when the pilgrims came back to the village that the remainder of the volume is principally concerned. Poor Barbro is obliged to go through deep waters, and for a time it seems as though nothing were in store for her save misery. But at the last the old wrong is expiated, and there is a happy ending.

The volume contains, of course, a great many descriptions of Jerusalem, and much emphasis is laid upon the incessant quarreling, not only among adherents of different religions, but among members of the various Christian sects; "the Catholic speaks evil of the Protestant, the Methodist of the Quaker, the Lutheran of the Reformist, the Russian of the Armenian." Such being the general temper, it is scarcely surprising that when a poor old Jewess, injured in a street accident, is taken into a heretofore empty hospital "founded by an English missionary society for the purpose of receiving Jewish patients, in order to convert them to Christianity," and dies there, the Jews refuse to permit her body to be buried in the Jewish cemetery in the valley of Jehoshaphat. Yet to be buried in this particular place had not only been her dying wish, but the one purpose for which, old and feeble, she had made the long journey to Jerusalem.

PRESTER JOHN

PRESTER JOHN. By John Buchan. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

A John Buchan novel can be depended on as a rattling good tale. This one was published some years ago as "The Great Diamond Pipe," but "Greenmantle" and other books of adventure had not then proclaimed its author's fame abroad, and it was probably not known to many of the readers who eagerly await John Buchan's novels now. Be that as it may, "Prester John" will easily bear a republishing. It is an excellent story of adventure, to be heartily commended to the novel-reading public here.

The story tells how a young Scotch lad, sent as clerk to a business house in South Africa, chanced upon the trail of strange mysteries before he even reached Durban, and followed mystery into peril and achievement in a little known land. Davie Crawfurd had met the famous African preacher, the Rev. John Laputa, at home in Edinburgh, and his memories of the man were not such as to inspire confidence. When he came across Laputa again in Africa he guessed that there was trouble afoot. But the wild romance, the strange fanaticism, the incredible adventure in the midst of which young Davie soon found himself were more than any lad certainly could have reason dimly to expect. A native uprising, buried treasure, a tradition and a fetich—these are the matters of which "Prester John" treats.

John Buchan's stories are never claptrap. Wild as his adventure is, he gives it all the air of verisimilitude by the care with which he constructs his story and the actual humanity that he gives to his characters. Of the apparently incredible he gives us much; of the artificial nothing. "Prester John" is reminiscent of Stevenson, but it is not imitative; it is admirable.

CAPTAIN GAULT

CAPTAIN GAULT. By William Hope Hodgson. Robert M. McBride & Co. $1.35 net.

The very unheroic hero of this new book is the Captain of an ocean steamer, or, rather, of several ocean steamers, for he is transferred from passenger to freight steamers and back again in the course of the volume. He himself is the narrator, telling his adventures as a smuggler in a series of short stories. For though ostensibly a merchant Captain, his real business is what the author apparently regards as the entirely excusable, if not exactly laudable, one of defrauding the English and United States Governments. However, Captain Gault is not altogether devoid of a sense of decency, as he proves in the affair of "The German Spy."

He is a decidedly ingenious person, and the methods he uses to cheat the customs officers are usually clever and frequently entertaining. The stories are fairly amusing, and succeed in holding the reader's attention. Most of them have to do with the smuggling of jewels into the United States, but one tells how a wonderful carving in which a certain Chinese secret society was greatly interested was—to put it mildly—taken possession of by Captain Gault, while another describes how he contrived to land something like two thousand pounds' worth of rifles on the English coast, under the very noses of the port officer and his men. Such persons, it may be added, never failed to walk into any trap which the worthy Captain set for them. The stories are rather neatly constructed, but the author's style is amateurish, while the dialogue, and especially that part of it put into the mouth of Mrs. Ernley of the opening story, is particularly poor.

THREE HUNDRED LEADING BOOKS

adequate attention. Under Biography and History several interesting lives are listed, and the histories, dealing for the most part with modern affairs and nations, have a wide range, including Japan, China, South Africa, South America, the Balkans, and Armenia. Travel and Description treat chiefly of American scenes and interests—our national parks, trips along the eastern and western coasts, Hawaii, and our latest territorial acquisition, the Virgin Islands.

A fact of unusual significance is the notable increase under the head of Poetry and Drama, which has almost doubled its total of last year. The books of verse far outnumber those on the drama, and while this year's classification does not perhaps contain so many names of achieved reputation as in last year's list, this only shows the growing chorus of our younger singers. Another evidence of public interest in poetry is the ever increasing number of anthologies. Vers libre apparently still continues to recede in favor as a medium of art, and traditional forms and methods are fast increasing their old supremacy. The present poets are for the most part lyrical rather than narrative or dramatic, and the subjective note is sounded chiefly on amatory or spiritual themes.

In Religion and Philosophy the greater number of books listed have to do with religion rather than philosophy, and these religious books in turn are more devotional and spiritual than critical or controversial. Essays and Criticism hold third place on the list and incidentally give further evidence to the increasing importance of poetry by the inclusion of several works dealing with poetry as an art and on its technical side. Under Science, Art, Nature, Sports, and Games, the influence of the war is plainly shown by the number of books on domestic economy and gardening.

For the reader's convenience the titles within each classification have been arranged with reference to the alphabetical order of the names of the authors. Unless otherwise stated, the size of the book described is either ordinary duodecimo or octavo, and the binding cloth. All prices quoted are net.

The classification runs as follows:

Fiction.
Sociology, Business, and Government.
Biography and History.
Travel and Description.
Poetry and Drama.

The Secret Emissary of the Hun!

HE had pretended to be a neutral—this Holmgren. Far off in the lumber camps of Maine he seemed so harmless. Who could guess that he was there to wreck a great new American industry?

And Holmgren's working and his plotting all came to nothing, just because one bright day a sodden tramp arrived from Boston, shanghaied in a flat car.

It's a great yarn. If you like a grand fight—if you like to read of the making of a man—if you like to read of love primeval—if you like the smell of the line and the feel of the woods—if you like to read of men living lustily in the raw edge of civilization—if you would see one of the many things that help us to win this war—get this book and read it.

Just think! It would cost you $1.50 to see an ordinary play, and this has the thrill of a dozen plays. Instead of reading it in one night, you will have a week of nights to read it. And all for $1.40.

THE BIG FIGHT

By CAPTAIN DAVID FALLON, M. C.

The True Story of a Real Fighter

As a record of actual experiences, nothing has come out of the war that surpasses in interest and excitement the account which Capt. Fallon gives of his part in the "Big Fight."

He fought in every branch of the service. He tells how it feels to command a tank, to go over the top, to fight in an aeroplane.

How he burrowed his way into the enemy's territory, entered the German trenches, was discovered, fought a duel with bombs, and lay wounded for three days in a shellhole in No Man's Land—all told with keen Irish humor in this most interesting of "war books."

The central theme of Mr. Poole's latest novel is the struggle between two wives, one of them living and the other dead, but still exerting strong influence. In the characters of Ethel, the second wife, somewhat idealistic, frank, distinctly lovable, and Joe, her husband, an architect, whose higher strivings have been somewhat killed by the materialism of his first wife, the author has drawn two figures of surpassing interest.

THE TREE OF HEAVEN. By May Sinclair. The Macmillan Company. $1.60.

The motive of the present novel is a vindication of the present generation, a generation that before the war was considered neurotic and decadent. BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE WAR

THE volume of literature relating to the war has made a large growth in the brief period that has elapsed since the issue of the Holiday Number of THE BOOK REVIEW in December, 1917. There are 321 titles in this Spring's bibliography, taken mainly from the catalogues of American publishers, a number more than twice the total of last Spring's publications and announcements. The explanation of the striking excess obviously lies in the fact that America, a little over a year ago, became a belligerent in the great world conflict, and acquired new and deeper interests in it. Some effect of our changed attitude was noted in the war bibliography included in the Autumn number of THE BOOK REVIEW published last October, which, as it was remarked at the time, contained an extraordinarily large number of titles; the expansion in the latter half of our first year of the war was, however, much more notable, 393 volumes having been published and announced in that period, an output about 50 per cent. greater than that of the preceding six months. Of these 393 volumes, 72 were listed in the Holiday Number of THE BOOK REVIEW; the rest appear below, arranged under appropriate headings:

IRISH CONSCRIPTION

Situation That Led to Lloyd George's Demand for It—Many Able-Bodied Irishmen Refuse to Fight

By CHARLES JOHNSTON.

WE have been hearing for some time now of the casualties of the old "Fighting Sixty-ninth"—now the 165th Regiment—with its Irish soldiers and Irish officers, who have been giving so good an account of themselves on the plains of France. Here is an experiment that might be worth trying: Take a batch of men of the old Sixty-ninth—men grievously wounded, maimed, perhaps, for life; men who have seen their dead, very likely their mutilated dead—and send them to hospital, not to Southern France or England, but to the south and west of Ireland, to Connaught or Munster or Leinster. Then let them come into familiar and daily contact with the farmers of Galway or Cork or Longford, fattened on the profits of the war and let these fully accepted conscription, the young men of Ireland should be exempt? What contribution have they made already to the Army of Civilization, the Army of Justice and Righteousness? What contributions, which they could make, do they still obstinately refuse to make?

The available figures (brought up to Oct. 15, 1916) show the total number of men of military age in Ireland as 547,827; of these, up to Oct. 15, 1916, 130,241 had enlisted for the great war. Of the remainder, it was considered that the labor of 245,875 was indispensable.

street, Ireland seemed to have retained its holiday aspect; men and women went about, lightly unconcerned; you would never have guessed from their appearance that the fate of mankind was being fought out in Picardy and Flanders. But, most of all, in Scotland a young man of military age could hardly be found; most of the young Scotchmen had enlisted at the beginning, the rest had gone with the draft; old men, women, boys were taking their places, performing their tasks. In Ireland, on the contrary, there seemed to be plenty of young men of military age everywhere. And this Scotch 970, an almost exactly equal number, or 100 per cent., still available after needed men and men physically unfit had been deducted. In Belfast, by the way, there remained only 7,806 available, or 20 per cent., while 38,543 had gone to the front.

From Leinster, with a population of something over a million, there went to the front (Dublin excepted) only 15,636 men, while 30,818 remained entirely available but unwilling to fight. Munster, with about the same population, contributed 21,079 fighting men, while 42,742, over twice as many, preferred to stay at home by the fireside. Connaught, with a population of 610,984, provided 5,440 soldiers, while 20,504, an equivalent of 376 per cent. of the fighters, formed the "slacker" list. It should be understood that in the four potential army corps who prefer not to fight men considered indispensable for agriculture or industries, medical practitioners, men of military age engaged in work on railways, or at iron, steel, explosive, and chemical

The Loreley

Army Always on Lookout for Specialists

Personnel Officers, Assisted by Trained Psychologists and Business Experts, Pick Out from Drafted Men Those Capable of Doing Skilled Work of the Committee on Classification of Personnel in the Army, Adjutant General's Department.

By W. V. BINGHAM

THE army believes in putting every skilled man where he is most needed. The officers responsible for assigning new arrivals at the camps know that this is a war of mechanisms, and that battles are won by troops, including the best electricians, chemists, truck repairers, and airplane adjusters. They have no intention of wasting a drafted man who happens to be a repairer of surgical instruments by placing him in the ammunition train.

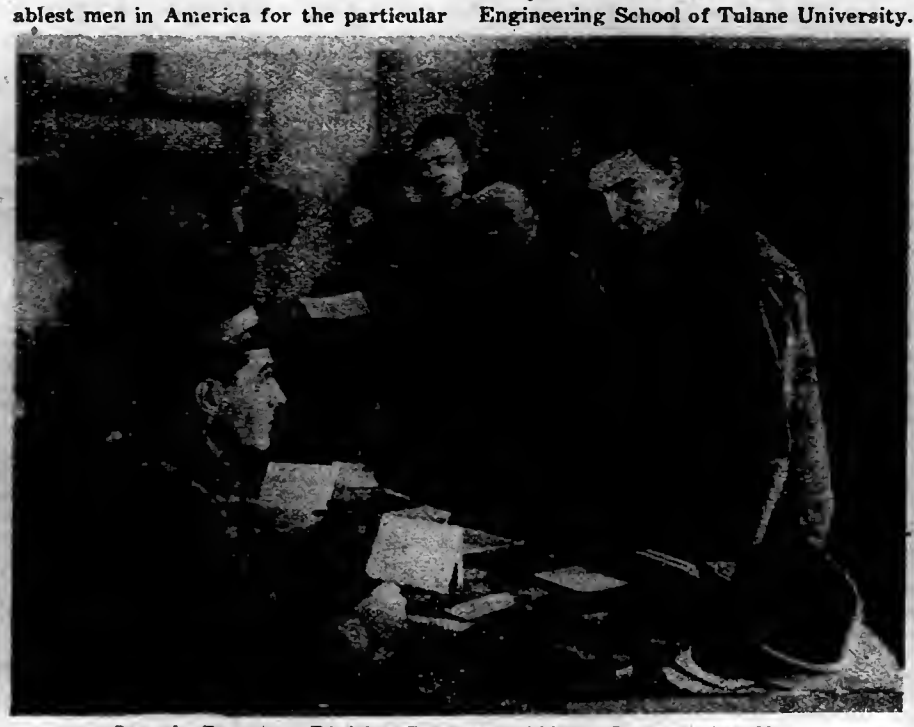
Systematic interviewing and examination of the men are necessary lest valuable material go undiscovered. For instance, down at Camp Green, where one of the regular army divisions is being mobilized, the Personnel Officer found among the recently enlisted privates a young man who was known to his company commander as a chemist, and as a possible driver of an automobile. Careful questioning by the interviewers who were engaged in classifying all the men in the camp revealed the fact that for the last year and a half this tall, quiet lad had been working for a rubber company making gas masks and respirator boxes.

Every cantonment and large camp now had its personnel office, in charge of a Captain or Major known as the Division Personnel Officer. Boards of specially trained examining officers, working under his direction, carefully interview all the men as to their occupational experience, their education, and their special qualifications; and, as a result of this systematized inventory, specialists ranging all the way from accountants to zincographers have been found, and a wealth of specialized services made available for the army.

The information as to the qualifications of all the enlisted men has been card catalogued at Division Headquarters, and tabbed in an ingenious fashion, which makes it merely a matter of a few moments to locate any available specialists. Snmmaries of the results of investigation have been sent by the Commanding Generals to Washington every two weeks for the guidance of the War Department in drawing from the various cantonments their quotas—as calls come from General Pershing for different sorts of technicians, French-speaking stenographers, car builders, foresters, and the like.

This personnel department of the army, resembling a great employment bureau, is centralized in Washington in what is known as the Committee on Classification of Personnel in the Army, a part of the Adjutant General's office. Through the personnel offices men are assigned to the particular units where their abilities and training will connt most—in infantry, artillery, trains, ordnance, quartermasters, medical, or signal service. America has no intention of repeating Great Britain's initial blunder, of wasting precious resources of technical ability and skill by sending men indiscriminately into the trenches irrespective of their individual qualifications and of the needs of the army for their specialized abilities behind the lines.

By means of this machinery for locating the specialists there have been selected during the Fall and Winter months and transferred out of the national army cantonments to units requiring men of specified qualifications 102,525 men. This number includes over a hundred capable physicists and meteorologists imperatively needed by the Aviation Section, chemists for gas defense work, surgical instrument repairment, bacteriologists, (including one of the ablest men in America for the particular duties required of him by the Sanitary Corps in France,) refrigeration experts for the food service of the Quartermaster Corps, 5,000 mechanics and technicians for the aviation service, and two-thirds of that number for the Land Division of the Signal Corps; 480 crane operators, 1,250 foresters, thousands of railroad builders, railway shop mechanics, and other skilled workmen for engineer regiments already overseas; 1,500 accountants, Inspectors, machinists, gunsmiths, and other ordnance specialists; 275 French-speaking chauffenrs, and an entire regiment of 2,600 French-speaking men for army headquarters to serve mainly as military police.



Captain Downing, Division Personnel Officer, Interviewing New Arrivals at Camp Lee.

Meanwhile, within the cantonments themselves, the work has been progressing of fitting men of special talent into the right places. Radio and telegraph operators, electricians and telephone experts, carrier pigeon fanciers, photographers, topographical draftsmen, mapmakers, and lithographers have been found and transferred to the Signal Corps and engineering units, where their experience and skill are essential in order that information obtained by our aviators, scouts, and intelligence officers regarding enemy positions and movements can be made promptly available in the midst of combat for artillery and infantry officers.

The Colonel commanding a regiment of engineers in one of the Southern encampments came to the Division Personnel Officer for help in finding a man for the most responsible position an enlisted man can fill, that of Regimental Sergeant Major. The Colonel was looking for a man of commanding presence and force of character, sufficiently mature, with military experience. He wanted some one with clerical experience, preferably as an accountant, and also with engineering training. The Personnel Officer thought that was a pretty large order; but, after studying his qualification record cards, he picked out three possibilities, and an orderly was sent to call the three soldiers in for an interview. The one who was finally selected met in full the Colonel's varied specifications. As a boy this man had enlisted in the navy and risen to the rank of machinist's mate. He had then left the navy and worked as a stenographer and bookkeeper; he is now twenty-six years old, and at the time of his enlistment in the National Guard Army last Fall he was a senior in the Engineering School of Tulane University. Moreover, he was a private in that Colonel's own regiment.

There have been, of course, isolated instances in which the Personnel Officers have failed to uncover lurking talent. Some red-blooded young draftsmen, typists, translators, leather inspectors, and laboratory workers have preferred to camouflage their civilian careers, in order to get the infantryman's coveted chance to dare death in the trenches and go over the top. Others, highly skilled, and willing enough to serve their country far behind the firing line on a counting-room stool, have been, nevertheless, adjudged by their superior officers to be more needed as bombers, singalmen, automatic rifle gunners, or Corporals in the line. And so one must expect to hear occasional tales of young college professors officiating as company cooks, or expert watchmakers engaged in the rough but imperative duty of mending ten-ton trucks. But, in the main, our young soldiers are finding their proper places. The army has the necessary machinery for sifting out the skilled and talented and assigning them to dnties for which their civilian training best qualifies them.

The men immediately responsible for initiating this enormous employment bureau are, as it happens, university professors of psychology, who have placed at the disposal of the army their expert knowledge of human abilities, intelligence, and skill. The director and administrative head of the committee is Dr. Walter Dill Scott, formerly of Northwestern University and more recently Professor of Applied Psychology and Director of the Bureau of Salesmanship Research at the Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh. Before the war Dr. Scott had been working out applications of psychological principles in the selection of employes, in conjunction with the executives of a number of big companies of nation-wide importance which had joined in the establishment of the Carnegie Bureau of Salesmanship Research. When the war came, and every one was asking himself what he could possibly do to help our soldiers beat the Kaiser, Dr. Scott undertook to adapt and make available for army use the best developments of sound employment practice. His work in the selection of candidates for commissions in the Reserve Officers' Training Camps attracted the attention of General McCain and Secretary Baker, and led to the creation last August of the Committee on Classification of Personnel in the Army.

Associated with Dr. Scott on the committee are such psychologists as Thorndike of Columbia, Angell of Chicago, Dodge of Wesleyan, Strong of Peabody College, Shepard of Michigan, Terman of Stanford, Watson of Johns Hopkins, and Yerkes of Harvard—a formidable array of scientific talent; and, lest there should be an excess of psychological theory, the committee has from the first also included men of broad experience in the administration of employment practice: H. L. Gardner of a big silk company, (recently snceeeded on the committee by William R. De Field, another business expert,) and R. C. Clothier, who is in France completing arrangements for adapting the present system of personnel classification to fit the needs of the replacement divisions in General Pershing's forces.

During the Fall months, when the personnel offices in the cantonments were being established and the first draft increments were pouring in most rapidly, the committee secured the help of fifteen of the ablest employment managers in America to represent the central office as organizers and field supervisors.

No adequate account of what has been accomplished toward effective military placement of drafted men could fail to record the names of these directors of employment, together with the business concerns that loaned their services to the War Department: Philip Brasher of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, William Clark of the International Harvester Company, J. W. Dietz of the Western Electric Company, C. R. Dooley of the Westinghouse Electric Company, N. F. Daugherty of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mark M. Jones of the Thomas A. Edison interests, R. B. King of the Hyatt Roller Bearing Company, W. S. MacArthur of Armour & Co., R. H. Puffer of the Larkin Company, P. J. Reilly of the Dennison Manufacturing Company, Dr. W. A. Sawyer of the American Pulley Company, J. E. Sheridan of the Crane Company, A. J. Turner of the Washington Water Power Company, Kendall Weisiger of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, and C. J. Whipple of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. These men left their own organizations at a time when the employment situation was acute to place at the disposal of the national army the best they had of talent and experience in putting skilled workers where they were most needed.

Little has heretofore been told by the War Department about this elaborate vocational sieve, this placement bureau doing a business of unprecedented proportions. But the country has a right to know that working in Washington and every cantonment there is this group of specialists in personnel or industrial employment engaged in studying military needs and seeing that the generous proportions of skill and talent which the nation has poured unstintedly into the army through the draft are not wasted, but wisely and effectively employed.

Hennig's Prosecutor on U. S. Attorney's Duty

Charge in Treason Case Was Withdrawn Just as It Would Have Been in Larceny Action—Courts Not Unbalanced by War Excitement

By RICHARD BARRY.

A FEW weeks ago the first case based on a charge of treason in this war came to trial in the United States Court in Brooklyn, but before it could reach the jury the Federal District Attorney moved for dismissal, and the prisoner was discharged. Wide comment on the occurrence was heard at the time, and from it developed the outstanding fact that in war times, as previously in peace times, our courts were being conducted with singular freedom from prejudice or vindictiveness, however high public feeling might run.

Sometimes it has been said that our public prosecutors have been public persecutors. In wartime, when communal passion becomes intense, when the enemy is more than 3,000 miles away, and when some of those in the community would like a more localized object for the venting of their feelings, the courts become more than ever a bulwark of freedom. As an eminent Judge recently said: "It is fully as important as that our armies should win battles that our courts should still administer justice, without fear or favor." For elucidation of this dictum, an interview was sought with the Public Prosecutor who had the courage to ask for the dismissal of the charge of treason against Paul Hennig, foreman of the gyroscope department of the Bliss torpedo works. This prosecutor was Melville J. France, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, the territory comprising Brooklyn, Long Island, and Staten Island.

Mr. Fra oroved reticent.

"I would prefer to say nothing of the Hennig case," he said in reply to a question as to why he withdrew his charge before the jury could register a decision. "It was just part of the day's work, an action I felt compelled to take in view of the facts which were developed. It was not extraordinary, and was only made to appear so because of the crime involved and the comparative rarity of trying any one on the charge of treason. If it had been a little case involving a Post Office robbery, with probably $50 at stake, no one would have paid any attention to it. The newspapers probably would not have given two lines to it. But with treason the charge and a suspected German-American on trial, every action was magnified."

"Then do you mean to say there was no difference in principle between withdrawing the charge in a $50 robbery case and in withdrawing the charge in an allegation of treason?"

"None in the least. It is the duty of the District Attorney, in one as in the other, to drop his case at any time when he becomes convinced that the defendant is innocent. These things happen frequently, not in cases of treason, but in minor offenses."

"How often has it happened in your term of office?"

Mr. France could not recall that in the three years he had held his present office he had ever before withdrawn his charge after the case came to trial. "But," he added, "it has frequently happened that a charge was dropped before a case came to trial, yet after an indictment had been returned. The principle is the same. Of course when one is obliged to reverse himself in the presence of Judge and jury the affair is more dramatic, but it bears no difference in law from asking the court to nolle an indictment in a case before it is called for trial."

Melville J. France.

"There is a grave temptation to the prosecuting officer to fight his case on to the very end once he has begun, isn't there?"

"Never at any time is this true if he is convinced of the innocence of the defendant. A District Attorney is an officer of the court. It is his function to assist the Judge in determining both the law and the evidence. If at any time he perverts that function and uses his office to prosecute a person whom he perceives is innocent, he is, in vital principle, as guilty of malfeasance in office as would be the Judge if he delivered a verdict contrary to his clear perception of the facts and the law. Merely because, in the organization of our courts, the District Attorney is obliged to present the case against the defendant he is not also obliged to conceal or to distort facts that might be in favor of the defendant. And if he discovers new evidence which leads him to be certain of the innocence of the defendant, it is his duty in law, as in conscience, to move for dismissal.

"The District Attorney has only one client, the State, but this client exacts of him a radically high standard of professional conduct. I will not say a higher standard than is exacted of other attorneys, but it must be admitted that his client is of a more complex character than other clients, and is, in fact, so curiously many sided that the very defendant whom the District Attorney prosecutes is a fractional part of that client. In this sense, then, the District Attorney must be especially jealous that all the interests are conscientiously served. To ignore those of the defendant might be to ignore those of every one else as well.

"It has been asserted there is danger in a prosecuting attorney's considering anything but making a successful prosecution, and I readily admit that this danger exists. A man whose client is the State must be extremely careful that he is not imposed upon. Naturally, every criminal puts his best foot foremost, and the clever ones are most ingenious and persistent in their own defense. If he is deceived by them to any important extent, a District Attorney is hardly fit for his office. He must at all times be especially guarded in accepting the allegations of the defense. This, perhaps, goes without saying, but I wish to emphasize it while you are placing me on record concerning the other and less recognized function of the public prosecutor."

Mr. France was asked if he was aware that many people today were subject to the delusion that innocent persons had been seized by the Government and held without sufficient evidence until the end of the war.

"No," he replied, "I do not know how any one could harbor an idea so contrary to the facts. So far as this office is concerned, I know the Government is not indulging in any extra-legal activities at the present time, and I can say frankly that this office holds the same attitude toward offenders that it does in times of peace. Their interests and their rights will be carefully guarded, but their crimes, if any, will be relentlessly prosecuted."

"Do you feel any especial hysteria of passion in the temper of the people who impersonally demand prosecutions?"

"I cannot say that I do, unless one is to judge by the number of anonymous letters conveying information about supposed violators of the law. We get many more such letters than we do in peace times. As a rule we turn them over immediately to the Secret Service, which investigates all complaints."

"Are these anonymous complaints the source of reliable information?"

"Occasionally, yes. We never overlook one, for by sifting them out we frequently discover tips that lead to important information. A few days ago an amusing incident grew out of a tip received in an anonymous letter. Our informant told us that he had overheard in an apartment in a Manhattan hotel suspicious conversations about German spies. He added that he felt it his duty to give us the number of the apartment and ask that the occupants be watched. The investigator who went to the apartment discovered that it was occupied by an agent of the Department of Justice."

"Did any one denounce you for your action in the Hennig case?"

"No. If, as you say, there is a widespread popular indignation against spies, and a desire on the part of many to convict them with the full rigor of the law, the decision made by this office was accepted as final. I can hardly believe that any one would want to persecute a man innocent of the charge alleged, and I don't know that anybody questioned either the sincerity or the acumen of the District Attorney. It seems to me that the whole matter was a very fair exposition of American justice.

"As a matter of fact, I cannot see that either our prosecuting attorneys or our courts have changed their methods on account of the war. Our procedure is just about the same as in times of peace. I see no reason why it should not continue the same. We are keyed up, and the strain is much greater, but we are striving to do justice."

How They Make Lonesome New Men Welcome at Camp Upton

IN the distribution of the "last lot" of the first draft for the national army, eighty "rookies" were assigned to Company I, 307th Infantry, at Camp Upton. When the new men reached the camp not long ago, Company I was ready for them, to the extent of a real sacrifice. The third and fourth platoons turned out of their barracks to give their places to the "fresh fish"—and the barracks of the third and fourth platoon, especially of the third, are the prize quarters of the company. Indeed, that dormitory of the third platoon of Company I of the 307th is famous all over Camp Upton. The platoon decorated it, took care of it, spent $50 on beautifying it, made it its home for weeks—and then marched out of it "so the new men would have a homelike place to live in." As Sergeant Charles H. French put it, "It's hard to give it up, but we know how queer you feel when you first get here."

The big second-floor dormitory that the third platoon gave up to the newcomers is really a homelike place. There are pictures and cartoons on the walls, and all sorts of interesting and appropriate "mottoes" painted on rafters and beams. The floor is oiled and the upper woodwork is painted. There are flags and banners hanging about. All the barracks at Camp Upton are big, airy, sunny places, with plenty of space as well as plenty of windows. But the dormitory of the third platoon of Company I looks as if a very happy crowd of friends really lived in it. As Sergeant French explained, that was just what it was; that was why it was hard to give it up; and by the same token that was why it was worth sacrificing.

On the wall as one goes up the stairs one meets first the direction that presents the nickname of the platoon: "This way to Captain Harrigan's Bayonet Tigers." At the head of the stairs, under the big American flag that hangs from the ceiling, the word "Welcome" in large letters has been painted for the new arrivals. Many of the pictures on the walls are photographs of famous men and women, including theatrical and movie stars, and a jolly lot of cartoons made by Thomas Stratton, "company cartoonist." Over on the side wall near the American flag President Wilson's war message hangs low enough for every soldier to read it. There are the flags of the Allies, too, and regimental and company banners. One of the most human touches of the place is the collection of widely varied mottoes that decorate the crossbeams.

"This is your home, so keep it clean," reads one of them, and close to it in even larger letters is written, "All we do is sign the pay check. Wot you want?" In a conspicuous place is painted that word of good advice for every soldier, "Keep your heart and rifle clean." Balancing it on the opposite side of the stove is another reminder, "Mother is thinking of you; write to her often."

In addition to making it look jolly and human, the boys added little touches of luxury here and there, as in the extra table that they made for themselves. Downstairs the fourth platoon has decorated its dormitory in like fashion. When the arrival of the new men was announced, it was evident that the seasoned soldiers of the company would have to "bunch up" somehow; so the men of the third and fourth decided to give up their barracks just because they were "more like home."

"We've been through it all, and it wasn't easy for us at the beginning," said Sergeant French. "We like it now, all right. It's wonderful. Gee, I've gained twenty pounds myself! And you couldn't find a happier lot of fellows anywhere. But when you first get here you don't know you're going to like it! So we talked it over when we heard the new men were coming, and we thought this was the best thing we could do.

"Oh, no," in answer to a question, "it isn't only for a night or two. We're giving it up for good. We'll be quartered somewhere else until we start over there."

THE ATLAS OF MODERN WAR

On the Shoulders of the Engineer Falls a Tremendous, Ever-Increasing Burden, Due to the Extraordinary Technical Demands of the Present Day

By COLLINS P. BLISS,
Professor of Mechanical Engineering at New York University.

NO art throughout history has been as progressive as the art of war. In the conflict now raging in Europe it has become, in large part, a technical occupation in which everything depends on the engineer.

Until Frederick the Great developed the complicated evolutions of close order drill, from which the modern Prussians have not entirely freed themselves, practically nothing was required from the average soldier except a fair degree of proficiency in the use of his arms. The mediaeval archer, whose bow was his companion in time of peace as well as in war, was ready to step from his accustomed civil occupation into the military ranks at the call of his war lord. The knight's business was fighting all the time; at most war meant for him a change from a joust at a tournament to a battle with an organized foe.

In the last hundred years the evolution of war has been more marked than in any other period since the invention of gunpowder. Napoleon exemplified for the first time the dominating value of artillery when skillfully massed and the need of concentrating an overwhelming superiority of troops against the weak point of an enemy. The American civil war brought rapid-fire ordnance, the use of fixed cartridges as ammunition, and the development of open-order fighting, besides the armored warship, which revolutionized the world's navies. The Franco-Prussian war of 1870 produced the "needle gun", and taught the value of colossal organization in preparedness for war.

The familiar developments of the present conflict—the use of the submarine and the airship, trench warfare, the employment of artillery on an unprecedented scale, especially in forming the barrage, the greatly extended use of the machine gun, the substitution of motor traction for horses, and the effective marshaling of numbers of men so immense that it had been conceived hitherto to be impossible to keep such forces in the field as mobilized and effective combatants—are all based upon a background of engineering skill. The engineer has led the way in bringing about this transformation in warfare. Without his ever-present help the new appliances would be useless in affecting the results of battles and campaigns.

The American Army will be operated, in large part, as a sort of traveling machine shop. A direct view of its rapidly developing functions in this respect is afforded by a list of the new units, for which the chief of engineers of the army is calling for volunteers, and which must be provided without delay in order to assure America's participation in the land operations of the Allies on the scale that is urgently necessary. These units are:

"Tank" service battalions.
Gas and flame service units.
Camouflage regiments.
Searchlight regiments.
Crane operating and maintenance regiments.
Electrical and mechanical regiments.
Forestry battalions for sawmill work.
Forestry battalions for auxiliary, road, camp, and bridge work.
General construction battalions.
Mining regiments.
Quarry regiments.
Railway construction battalions.
Railway maintenance and equipment battalions.
Railway maintenance of way battalions.
Railway operating and shop battalions.
Railway transportation battalions.
Road building battalions.
Sapper regiments.
Supply and shop battalions.
Surveying, ranging, and map reproduction regiments.
Truck and wagon companies.
Water supply companies.

It is obvious that only technically trained troops can operate the new "tanks," which depend entirely upon mechanics for their success. The American type of tank, which is already being produced in considerable numbers, is yet to be demonstrated on the field of battle. It is understood that constant improvements in the construction of these strange masses of machinery are being made, not only by the Americans, but also by the British, French, and Germans. The classes of men whom the Engineer Department considers most needed for this service are chauffeurs, machinists, mechanics, dredge and steam shovel operators, and gas and steam engineers.

To the new men who are being drafted for the gas and flame service will fall the task of bringing into play all that American scientists are able to develop for the prosecution of this terrible form of warfare, which Germany has resurrected from the days, centuries ago, when "Greek fire" was used in the defense of Constantinople against the Turks. The use of gas and flame to disconcert and shatter an enemy column depends largely upon accurate knowledge of atmospheric conditions and of the chemical operations involved. This branch of warfare requires a rare degree of initiative and decision in thought and action, as well as sufficient scientific knowledge. For enlistment in gas and flame battalions the Engineer Department is calling especially upon machinists, chemical workers, plumbers, steamfitters, electricians, boilermakers, compresser men, pipe fitters, engine men, powder men, blacksmiths, carpenters, and tinsmiths.

American Army Engineers Operating Trains Behind British Front.

American ingenuity is relied upon to produce some novelties in the camouflage service, which the Engineer Department considers so valuable that it is forming separate units for it. Successful concealment from the eyes of the enemy is, in the present war, often absolutely necessary. The camouflage companies will use their skill and original ideas in the concealment of the location of trenches, listening posts, gun emplacements, airplane sheds, and lines of communication. They will use all their artifices in the preparation of imitations of guns, roads, trenches, shell holes, and supply trains. For this work the army calls for the services of painters, architects, sculptors, motion picture men, photographers, scene painters, traction men, stage carpenters, sheet metal workers, riggers, derrick men, and property men.

Another specialty developed in the present war is the widely extended use of searchlights for battle illumination and protection against aircraft. Surprise evolutions in the dark, formerly one of the most familiar aspects of war, have been rendered well-nigh obsolete by the development of searchlight operations, made possible for the first time by the practical application of electricity to this form of illumination. For the searchlight regiments the types of men desired are searchlight mechanics, electricians, gas engine operators, blacksmiths, wheelwrights, saddlers, and wagoners.

The crane operating and maintenance regiments are required in unusual number and efficiency, owing to the bold decision of America to maintain armies of millions of men in an arena of operations 3,000 miles from home. These regiments will be stationed at the ports of debarkation which France has provided for our army, in order to facilitate the loading and unloading of ships. A great system of electrical cranes and hoists must be provided at these ports. Electrical and mechanical units will also install additions for lighting and power work, operate sub-station machinery, maintain high tension wiring, low tension wiring, and lighting systems, motor-driven pumps, electric storage batteries, and other varieties of electrical machinery.

Not only in the loading and unloading of ships bearing men and supplies, but in a great variety of other directions, is this to be an electrical war. It is inevitable that America, the pioneer in so much that is vital in the practical application of electricity to the uses of modern life, should enlist this form of its national genius in the great military undertaking to which it has set itself resolutely. The Engineer Department of the army is making a special effort to obtain the service of high-class men for the new electrical-mechanical regiments. They will include electrical-mechanical Superintendents and foremen of construction, foremen of automobile transportation, operators for oil, gas, electrical, and steam plants; for pumps and generators of electric current, wiremen, linemen, armature winders, oxy-acetylene welders, machinists, blacksmiths, sheet metal workers skilled in tin, brass, and iron work, foundrymen, pattern workers, plumbers, pipe fitters, chauffeurs, boilermakers, bricklayers, masons, and clerks for administrative purposes.

America, a nation of builders, must build in this war as never before, in order to prepare for the effective maintenance of its maximum forces in the field of operations. Lumber is urgently needed for warehouses, railroad ties, bridges, bombproof roofs, lining of mine galleries, erection of camps, hospitals, and the almost infinite variety of buildings needed for the men maintained in service. Conditions require that the extensive forests of France shall supply this timber, but in order to make use of it in the quickest and best way, the Engineer Department is organizing forestry battalions. For these units it needs wood bosses, sawyers, filers, logging teamsters, skiddermen, stationary engineers, gasoline motormen, tractor drivers, stationary firemen, log scalers, tie cutters, pole and piling men, charcoal burners, sawmill foremen, millwrights, railroad track bosses and trackmen, locomotive engineers, firemen and brakemen, road construction foremen and workmen, tractor and roller road operators, concrete foremen, asphalt plant workmen, asphalt spreaders, rakers, and bridge carpenters.

Mining units, always needed in recent wars, are far more necessary now than ever before. Underground construction, particularly the driving of tunnels or mine galleries in trench operations for the purpose of demolishing the enemy's works, is constantly carried on.

The army also expects to reopen coal mines which have been closed or partly destroyed by the Germans and to make use of the coal for the army's needs and for the French people. Besides the coal mines, quarries will be operated under engineering supervision for obtaining stone to be used in the construction of roads, wharves, and buildings.

Never before have railroads played such an important part in the operations of war. A network of new railways must be constructed behind every large force of American troops in order to assure a constant food and ammunition supply in great quantities for the armies at the front. Every time an advance is made, even if it is only a fraction of a mile, the tracks must follow the troops at once, so that their fighting capacity shall not be impaired by lack of subsistence and war materials.

W. W. Atterbury, formerly a Vice President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, assisted by a number of "live wire" construction and operating men, who have offered their services to the Government, has already made wonderful progress with this vital work. Germany for years has been working out the problem of constructing and utilizing a system of strategic railways for war. It falls to the lot of General Atterbury and his associates to accomplish in a short time what Germany had reduced to a science through a long period of careful experimentation.

No country could supply, without a great deal of preliminary organization and preparation, the great number of engineers and technically trained men needed for the gigantic task which America has undertaken. The United States is prolific in engineering talent of the first order, but its engineers are not as numerous in proportion to the population as are those of Germany. That country, having foreseen for many years that a technical war would be waged, has been using its universities freely for developing the men needed.

A case that may be cited is that of the need for acetylene welders, who operate under the engineers in repairing guns and numerous other objects of metal which are part of the equipment of war. When the German Army entered Belgium, in August, 1914, it is said to have had 20,000 of these skilled workers with it ready to respond instantly to emergency calls. There were then only 6,000 acetylene welders in the United States, but the lack of them, as well as of many other types of men required by the army for its engineering operations, is being made up by co-operation with the Government on the part of the universities and training schools.

Italy's Navy Chief Explains Italian Claims

Trent, Trieste, Istria, and Dalmatia Are Magic Words to Every Italian, He Says, Which Symbolize His Country's Most Sacred Hopes

The analysis printed below of Italy's claim to Trent, Trieste, the eastern shore of the Adriatic, and the islands off Dalmatia was sent in the form of a letter by Admiral Thaon di Revel, Commander in Chief of the Italian Navy, to Whitney Warren, New York architect and writer on the war. It may be considered, says its recipient, as directed through him to the American Nation. The letter forms the preface of a pamphlet written recently by Mr. Warren on the Italian claims.

By ADMIRAL THAON DI REVEL,
Commander in Chief of the Italian Navy.

IF one should suddenly ask cultivated and generally well informed men in Italy for data on the special problems that closely affect the United States, the defense of its coasts, its national interests, its needs with regard to its frontiers, surely very few of them would be able to give a prompt and accurate reply. As for the great mass of the Italian people, they are entirely ignorant of such problems.

Therefore, one may take for granted, without hurting anybody's feelings, that in the United States as well the greater part of the people, even the majority of the educated classes, are ignorant concerning the vital problems of the new Italy.

What meaning for an American have the words Trent, Trieste, Istria, Dalmatia, and Adriatic, except as geographical terms? Human knowledge is today so vast that it is impossible to know everything a priori. But when an entire nation leaps to arms, fights and dies breathing those words, when it raises them to the level of a symbol, when it makes them float like a flag and resound like a solemn oath, it is because they have something besides a geographical significance; it is because they mean something else, because they represent thoughts rooted in the history, existence, and spiritual and material aspirations of an entire race; it is because they express sentiments and acts which every Italian should explain to his friends, to his allies, to every man of just mind, that they may correctly appreciate the acts, ambitions, hopes, and indisputable rights of a nation engaged in a gigantic struggle for the same ideal of humanity and justice which has impelled free America to resort to arms.

Trent, Trieste, Istria, Dalmatia, Adriatic—there you have five magic words which, for Italians of no matter what part of the world, justify the faith upon which the life and actions of the new Italy are founded. Here is what an Italian hears in those words:

"Italy, after centuries of servitude, has been able to gather together most of the scattered fragments of her territory, to wrest them by successive bloody wars from foreign usurpers. But Italy is not yet fully united, nor can she ever be, or ever feel secure at home, as long as her doors remain open, as long as she is unable to lead back to their cradle those of her sons who still groan under the foreign yoke.

"We are one of the oldest nations of the earth. After having lived in the splendid age of Rome, we have endured slavery for centuries. We have learned to suffer, but not to bow beneath the yoke. And today we are fighting to complete our union, to retake what belongs to us. Should we not obtain it we are doomed to humiliation; but rather than submit we prefer to die. Trent and Trieste are the doors of our home; they are the front rooms of our house, and, both at Trent and Trieste, a stranger has intruded upon us and prevents us from closing these doors. From our very threshold he sends his armed minions to rob us and impose his will upon us. If we do not liberate our land now we shall never liberate it; we shall be forced to humiliation in order to live. But we will not do that; we can not do it. As long as there are Italians to be freed and as long as there are Italians to do the fighting we will fight; we will fight as long as we are not the owners of our property."

That is what Trent and Trieste mean. Was Italy right when she rose up to deliver those two provinces?

If the ports of the United States were in the hands of foreigners, if the country about New York and San Francisco were occupied by the Germans, would Americans have acted any differently from the Italians?

The land frontier of Italy is formed by the Alps; they are a great wall at the foot of which lies the peaceful and fertile Lombardo-Venetian plain. But this frontier does not belong entirely to Italy; upon this plain Austria still keeps places where she imposes her tyranny upon a free people of 38,000,000 souls! There must be an end of this state of affairs.If the causes for a future war are to be eradicated, if the supreme claims of right and liberty are to be recognized at last.

Admiral Thaon di Revel,
Commander in Chief of the Italian Navy.

But Italy's frontiers are not entirely upon the land; they are also in great part upon the sea. What Trent and Trieste are upon the Continent the Adriatic is in relation to the ocean. Italy is a land which draws the breath of life from the sea. Her two lungs are the Tyrrhenian and the Adriatic. If you take one lung from a man he will probably continue to drag along his existence, but he will none the less be consumptive; if you take the Adriatic from Italy she will be isolated and die of consumption.

It suffices to glance at the map to see that, without possession of Dalmatia and the Curzolarias, (the name given by Italians to the islands just south of Dalmatia,) the Adriatic will never be a sea upon which Italy can feel herself safe.

This statement rests upon historical, ethnical, geographic, and military foundations; let me briefly call attention to them:

The Adriatic is for Italy the great route to the Orient, just as the Tyrrhenian is her great route toward the two Americas; it is the road upon which the Venetians concentrated all the efforts which brought to them commerce and wealth. It is also the road by which the Turkish hordes burst upon our coasts to rob us, to fill their harems and art galleries. Forced, upon the one hand, by the necessity of defending herself, upon the other by the need to live, Venice jealously guarded her geographical frontiers and assured herself of undivided possession of a sea where there is room for only one master, not for two.

When Venice succumbed and the Austrians got possession of the city they wished to win a foothold in the Adriatic and take complete possession of the heritage of St. Mark. Italy had not yet emerged from her long years of servitude, but she was drawing near to the fulfillment of her destiny; the usurped heritage was an integral and indivisible part of the great Italian fatherland, still too weak to rise and burst its chains.

When Austria turned toward the Adriatic she found everywhere traces of the Italian spirit; everthing along its coasts was Latin, a living fragment of the Italian homeland. Little by little Austria, by persecutions and confiscations, substituted for the Italians of the coastlands Croatians from the interior. Our homes, our altars, our great buildings of the olden time, are today largely occupied by strangers, people speaking another language, belonging to another civilization, who do not know what they have wrested from us, who do not understand the language of our country or of our ruins. They know only that they have installed themselves there because this strip of coast represents domination over the Adriatic, the key to wealth, to trade with the Orient. The Italians who have remained in Dalmatia are struggling to preserve what remains of their country, and are appealing to us for help; but their voice grows weaker and weaker, because their number is steadily dwindling. We must accomplish the work of liberation now, because later it will be too late, our Latin civilization, stretching back for a thousand years, will be annihilated by the despoilers.

To all these reasons another, of a military character, must be added. Look at our dreadnoughts! They are shut up at Taranto because we are not in possession of the Adriatic. We have not a harbor upon the Adriatic large or deep enough for a big fleet. Austria, on the other hand, from her base at Pola, dominates the entire upper Adriatic; from Sebenico and Spalato, the entire central Adriatic, and, from Cattaro, the entire lower Adriatic as far as Corfu. Moreover, every channel, every island, and, especially, the Curzolarias, have excellent harbors, capable of sheltering a numerous and powerful fleet.

Thus Austria is the mistress of the Adriatic despite the immense inferiority of her navy in comparison with that of Italy and her allies, France and England. At any moment she can send her ships out from any point along the magnificent coast which she has stolen from us, and we have not a single port where we can shelter ships of heavy tonnage. * * *

For these reasons Italians of today see in the words "Adriatic" and "Dalmatia" a symbol of the following thought:

"We cannot avail ourselves of this sea which bathes half of our country, because our coast has no harbors and all the advantage lies upon the other shore. Austria has existed many centuries without the Adriatic, yet has been prosperous and very powerful, because she is not a maritime nation, but simply and essentially a continental nation. We, on the contrary, on account of our geographical position, are exclusively a maritime country. We have never been able to live without the Adriatic; and today, threatened with losing it for all time and being unable to achieve our national unity, we will fight to the death to preserve it. To lose the Adriatic means for us impoverishment, decline, and exclusion forever from the world of strong nations."

Italy, then, is not demanding new territorial conquests; she is not urged forward by imperialistic longings; she merely wishes to resume possession of lands which belonged to her for centuries, which round out her national unity, which are indispensable to her if she is to live, prosper, and defend her work, her race, her civilization. Take a map a century old—to whom did the lands belong which are now held by Austria? These lands were conquered by the Hapsburgs; they must return to Italy what they took from her. If Italy does not get assured, definite control of her natural frontiers, a state of war between her and Austria will always exist in a latent state, because Italy cannot live without the necessities of life. Not to be able to live is to die; but, before dying, Italy will sacrifice even the last of her sons.

If further proof be necessary that Italy, in demanding the return of Trent, Trieste, Istria, Dalmatia, and the Curzolaria Islands, is not impelled by greed, all that is needed is to call attention to these facts:

Had Italy harbored ambitions of conquest she would not have hesitated to have entered into compacts with the Central Empires nor to have profited from the advantages which they offered her. But, on the contrary, the vision came instantaneously and clearly to Italy; she realized that hers was the mission to deliver her brothers still under the yoke and save Latin civilization. She entered the war at the most unfavorable moment for herself, when everything pointed to victory for the Central Powers, when Russia had already been beaten and thrust back. She hurled herself, head down, into the fight, with magnificent confidence, animated by an ideal of liberty and justice for all nations, and, above all, for the Italian Nation. * * *

Yes, we are not waging a war of conquest; we are fighting to expel an intruder from our home, an intruder who thrust himself upon us when we were still children and too weak to drive him away. * * *

Since I have found you to be an American who quickly analyzes these vast problems, I take the liberty of asking you for what reasons you Americans have entered into this struggle? Is it in order to pour out millions in vain, destroy treasures of welfare, life, and science, simply to have the mistakes and injustices of today arise anew within a few years? No, my dear friend, you have entered the war for a very noble ideal of humanity; to contribute, like the great nation that you are, toward giving liberty to every people worthy of it and capable of enjoying it according to the degree of its social development, so that never again in the future may the imperialistic injustices and perfidies that have caused the war be repeated.

We have need of the help of America, who is free and mistress of her own house, in liberating ourselves entirely and making ourselves masters in our house; we have need that she, with all her strength and sense of right and justice, support our sacred title to Trent and Trieste, Istria, Dalmatia, and the Curzolaria Islands, on the day that peace talk begins. Therein lies for us the only foundation of a real, durable peace.

America can be, in a certain sense, the arbiter between two civilizations; she can either kill Latin civilization by leaving the Adriatic in the hands of the barbarians or hurl back the Teutonic hordes far from the confines which nature has assigned to that civilization, and which its assailants, through lust for plunder and domination, have lately invaded. I feel sure that a generous and intelligent nation like yours, which loves nothing more than it loves liberty and justice, will not hesitate in choosing its road.

FARM-TO-TABLE PARCEL POST

INCREASING the country's food supply, providing quick delivery of farm produce to the consumer, and making money for the Government are the three big things that James I. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, is working for in advocating an extension of the parcel post service by motor vehicles. There is no theory about it, according to Mr. Blakslee, for he says he has proved every one of the three propositions.

The Post Office motor truck which brought more than 2,900 pounds of eggs, butter, and honey, in addition to 400 newly hatched chicks, to New York from Lancaster, Penn., a few days ago, was an object lesson of the possibilities in the farm-to-the-table movement the Government is endeavoring to establish in many parts of the country. The distance, 100 miles, was covered in twelve hours, but the actual running time was ten hours. New York is in the second parcel post zone from Lancaster, and the postal receipts were $31.61. Operating costs were less than $20. The Government made, therefore, nearly $12.

The produce carried was only handled four times, first at the loading point; second, the unloading at the Pennsylvania Station Post Office; third, reloading on smaller Post Office wagons; fourth, delivery to the consignees. The usual number of handlings in customary freight or express transactions of this sort is fourteen. It is possible to reduce these four handlings to two operations by direct delivery to the consignee, which Mr. Blakslee hopes to establish to a considerable extent as the system becomes more perfected.

This experimental parcel post trip to New York City was the longest through run of its kind in the history of the Post Office Department, and it was also the first time that foodstuffs have ever been brought into the metropolis by parcel post from a rural territory over 100 miles distant with so few changes in transit. The car making the run was one of twenty-one trucks, of one-and-a-half-ton capacity, which have been put in parcel post service for direct delivery from the farms within the last four months.

"This Government postal service is no longer an experiment," said Mr. Blakslee, in explaining the success of the plan. "The first Post Office motor truck in the farm-to-the-table delivery system went into service Dec. 10 last, running from Washington for about fifty miles into the suburbs. It was an immediate success, and others were soon installed. This parcel post motor delivery service is now in daily operation on the Lincoln Highway main trunk line from Washington to Philadelphia; in addition are several routes radiating from the trunk line, established as feeders to the main route.

"The system adopted by the department in these routes is slightly different from the customary parcel post service in that the sender is not obliged to go to the nearest Post Office to mail his package, but may give it to the driver of the United States postal truck. In other words, the postal truck is a United States Post Office on wheels, the driver exercising all the duties of the postal clerk. He sells stamps, cancels the package, and can make immediate deliveries along his route. Realize what this service means to the farmer. Instead of driving to the village Post Office with his goods, or paying a large amount for cartage or express rates, he bundles up his packages and loads them into the postal truck as it passes his door. He can ship 100 packages if he desires. So insistent was the demand that facilities be permitted the farmers to ship crates of eggs by parcel post that on March 15 the department raised the maximum parcel post weight from 50 to 70 pounds. A crate of eggs usually weighs 54 pounds. The use of motor trucks justifies the new weight limit, and it will give the farmer the chance he has always wanted, that of shipping a moderately large quantity of produce for a small price. Parcels of 70 pounds may be sent to points within the first, second, and third postal zones.

"The results of the last month have shown a big profit to the Government, and that very fact demonstrates more conclusively than any other argument the demand for such service. Parcel post statistics have hitherto shown that the rural sections receive about eight packages to one sent out. In other words, the farmer buys eight times as much from the city by parcel post as he sends in. As the Government is now bringing the Post Office direct to his door, there is no reason why every farmer who raises good produce should not ship quantities of food by the Post Office trucks.

"Just as soon as the farmer realizes the possibilities that the Government is offering him, he will raise bigger, and, perhaps, better crops. I firmly believe that the extension of the system will do as much as any agency, if not more, to stimulate increased food production. Let the farmer see that he can sell all his produce at a fair price and he will plow up more acres. Government profit in any branch of the postal service is a good thing, but at the present time that takes second place when compared to the necessity for food production on the biggest possible scale. And do not forget that we have less men than ever to produce the food. The draft, enlistments, and other war duties have reduced our productive capacity fully 33 1-3 per cent.

"Our duty now is to make the remaining productive force do not only as much but even more than was possible before the depletion in numbers. When the farmer is assured of a ready market and a fair price, he will do his part and supply the goods. One motor truck can haul more than three or four farm wagons. One driver can replace eight farm producers, who not only cease active work of production in marketing but usually convey produce one way only whenever they suspend farm work to drive a horse and cart twelve miles or so to town and return.

"The Post Office Department can supply motor truck avenues of communication for a distance of fifty to one hundred miles from any market and tap a source of supply that has never hitherto produced to the maximum capacity. Regular scheduled motor truck service will surely stimulate increased production of butter, eggs, poultry, garden truck, and other commodities in quantities that would never pay for transportation in small lots from one producer."

The following figures supplied by Mr. Blakslee show the receipts and costs of mail carried for a period of six days, on seven of the recently established motor truck postal routes. The receipts include both first and fourth class mail, except the last named, which is only parcel post mail:

Route.	Receipts.	Cost.
Baltimore-Oxford	$62.37	$13.00
Baltimore-Mount Airy..	475.73	54.36
Hagerstown-Mount Airy	198.35	74.52
Baltimore-Gettysburg .	355.67	59.04
Lancaster-Gettysburg .	203.82	67.80
Baltimore-Solomons Island	1,120.55	127.50
Philadelphia-Oxford ...	645.66	145.08
Total	$3,062.15	$591.30

"The usual estimate of unit cost per mile as recognized hy efficiency engineers," continued Mr. Blakslee, "has been deliberately increased in estimating the Government cost, so that we might partially, if not wholly, satisfy the conscientious objections of this modern progressive system of conveyance presented by the type of individual who can always show cause why a thing should not be done."

The parcel post motor truck routes which have been in successful operation during the last four months are: Philadelphia to Atlantic City; Philadelphia to Oxford; Oxford to Baltimore; Mount Airy to Baltimore; Hagerstown to Mount Airy; Mount Airy to Washington; Lancaster to Gettysburg; Washington to Leonardtown, Md.; Baltimore to Solomons Island, on the eastern part of Chesapeake Bay; Gettysburg to Baltimore. Eighteen trucks are in daily service on these routes and three emergency trucks are kept at different points on the road between Philadelphia and Baltimore. Despite the severe test to which the trucks were subjected during the Winter months, service was maintained with little delay and with slight mechanical or tire trouble.

The Post Office Department is planning to open similar routes in several Southern localities, especially in Texas and Georgia. Mr. Blakslee is considering a plan for a parcel post motor truck route between New York City and Hartford, with the New York terminus at 125th Street.

A Post Office bill now in the Senate authorizes the appropriation of $100,000 for experimental postal lines. The amount is ridiculously small, says Mr. Blakslee. Last year an effort was made to get a special appropriation through Congress, but it failed. Recognizing the importance of installing a wider rural system of quick parcel post delivery the Post Office Department went ahead with its experimental routes, using for the purpose a part of the funds provided for the improvement of inland postal transportation.

"Motor truck postal service will ultimately be one of the biggest things in the history of the Post Office Department," added Mr. Blakslee. "A motor truck can collect and deliver mail, including farm produce, over 100 miles of highway within a day of twelve hours. By using 1,560 motor trucks this service could be performed twice within twenty-four hours on the 156,000 miles of well-improved highway in the United States. The cost of operation would not exceed 20 cents a mile. This fleet of trucks, therefore, would cover 312,000 miles each twenty-four hours. The cost, based on the present price of gasoline and maintenance of equipment, would approximate $19,531,200. Their earnings, operating 200 miles a day, that is, once each way over a distance of 100 miles, would exceed $70 per truck a day, or $34,179,600 per annum, based on the present rates of postage and the average earnings of the few motor trucks recently placed in rural service. These estimates are based on working six days a week, which, deducting fifty-two Sundays, gives 313 postal service days for the year. A still further reduction allowing for holidays and other emergencies would still leave a large percentage of profit in favor of the Government."

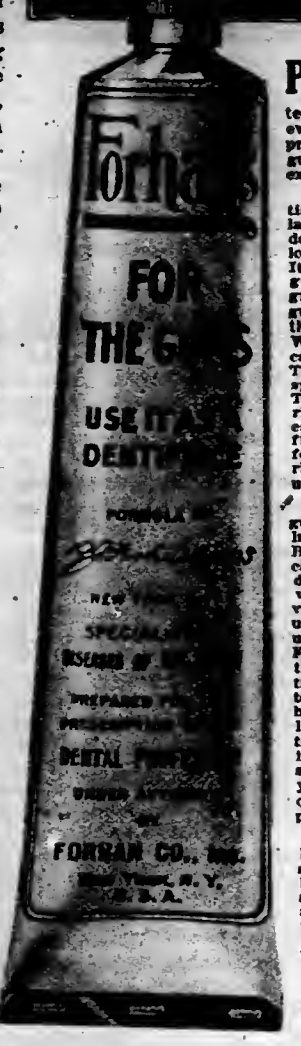
A grave tooth danger—tender, relaxing gums



PYORRHEA, with a premature loss of teeth, is almost inevitable if you do not properly care for your gums. Here is the explanation:

As you age the body tissues naturally relax. You see the evidence of this tissue-loosening in the neck. It goes on in your gums, too. As you grow older your gums shrink below the normal gum line. Want of care complicates the process. They become flabby, spongy, inflamed. Then you have Pyorrhea (Riggs' Disease). Four out of five people over forty have Pyorrhea. And many under forty also.

Don't let a tender gum spot develop. It indicates Pyorrhea. Bleeding gums indicate it, too. Immediately get Forhan's, which positively prevents Pyorrhea if used in time and used consistently. Forhan's counters this gum deterioration even while it tones the gums and hardens them. They in turn stimulate the teeth. Forhan's in addition will scientifically clean your teeth. It is cool, antiseptic, pleasant.

If gum-shrinkage has already set in, start using Forhan's and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

French Engravings and Various Exhibitions

Art at Home and Abroad

"Soiree des Tuileries," from an Engraving by Simonet of Baudouin's Painting. (A Fine Impression of This Subject Is in the Loan Exhibition of French Prints at the Mnseum of French Art.)

THE superb loan collection of French eighteenth century engravings at the Museum of French Art deserves more than passing mention.

The popularity of French eighteenth century prints is widespread and lies chiefly in the superb technical adequacy with which amusing and lively subjects are presented. Even in the representations of the "vie galante" in its least dignified aspects there is so exquisite a delicacy of statement that the mind refuses to accept the vulgarity of these subjects. And the principal theme, whatever its character, almost invariably is surrounded by charming and multitudinous detail, arranged to avoid the appearance of crowding, but filling the composition with architecture, furniture, costumes, objects of use and adornment, lap dogs, sewing baskets, toilet tables, mirrors, miniatures, vases, flowers, and very rarely, cradles and children. The whole life of the century from its revolt against the frozen pomp of Louis Quatorze through its high tide with the young Louis Quinze, studying his part with apparent conscience and docility, through its steady and swift decadence in morality, until its close in bloodshed and terror, is depicted in the brilliant idiom of the French engravers. It was a frank age. The unfortunate Louis XV. said to posterity in his will, "I have Debucourt, distinguished especially for the beauty of his color and its fidelity to the original paintings from which he worked, is shown in many brilliant impressions, of which the rarest are Mrs. Duveen's "La Rose," "La Main," and "L'Oiseau Ranimé." Demarteau's work in the crayon manner is characteristic of his special style, and his "Etude de Femme," after Fragonard, and lent by Mr. Morgan, is not only rare but a remarkably fine subject and interpretation, all the wholesomeness of Fragonard at his best having been put into the handsome robust figure. Janinet, another engraver famous for his color, cools the opulent beauty of such prints as "La Comparison" with his films of blue and ashes of crimson. In sharpest contrast to this subject is the charming and homely "Famille du Fermier" of Fragonard in a unique proof etching by Marvalliet and Romarvet. There are such unusual things as St. Aubin's "Papilloneries," lent by "a friend of the museum," graceful and spontaneous in execution as in conception. There are serious and stately subjects that act as ballast for the gayety and ebullience of the exhibition as a whole, Janinet's translations of Hubert Robert's Roman scenes, for example, lent by Miss Margaret B. Gould; the little group of portraits, the "Almanach National," by Debucourt and several historical scenes. And everywhere there is extraordinary freshness of impression, here, and comparison of the two shows how much is lost in the translation in spite of the beauty of Simonet's work and the excellence of the impression. In the drawing, the trees, wavering sensitively against the night sky, have a little of the quality of Watteau's bosky distances with their impalpable aerial envelope and tender variations of tone. In the engraving, although beautifully drawn, they are detached from their background and definitely silhouetted against the mass of cloud forms. The figures also are more emphatic in the engraving, with sharper lights and sharper accents of dark, and with less subtlety of expression; the evanescent charm of the light casting long shadows, of the softly rustling silks and languorous glances contrasted with the stately architecture of the gardens and with the boisterous indignation of the small barking dog, is more potent in the drawing; the lavish prettiness of the whole composition more engaging. Yet Simonet was one of the best of Baudouin's interpreters, and without the original gouache to disturb our satisfaction, the print would be found as brilliant and graceful as the most exacting could wish.

Paintings, Drawings, and Etchings by Horace Brodsky.

The work by Horace Brodsky now on view at The Penguin shows an experimental and inquiring mind. After the artist has mastered a formula he forsakes it to master another, an admirable practice if the foundations of technical expertness are sufficiently sound and strong. Mr. Brodsky masters technical devices with surprising and almost disconcerting ease. It would be difficult to find a more delightful treatment of water color than he offers in one or two tender little visions of gray walls flushed with pure color, simple washes of thin pigment that have the delicacy of rose leaves. From these he turns alertly to a dock scene with longshoremen, blazing with color, blue, red, green, and yellow, in patches of moderate size and extreme intensity, hot molten color that seems to run thick from a fiery furnace. His "Oriental Market Place" is in the same vein, and also enlivened with humor in the characterization of the figures. His "Horse Sale," on the other hand, is neither delicate nor intense in color, neither sensitive nor bold in handling, but rather heavy, rather gray, and technically inexpressive. He is more successful with his low key in the "High Bridge," in which the color is strong but without violence. The great arch of the bridge cuts, dark red, across the composition, and back of it is a deep green sky. A yellow sail with violet shadows on a white boat marked by a strong green band is relieved against the red of the bridge, and in the foreground are figures, a supposedly American policeman with a London Bobby's hat, guiding a small child. It is a striking and handsome picture, and, like the others, tells no story save that of color and design. His human figures Mr. Brodsky makes out of his head, and it is here that one doubts the firmness of his structural groundwork. The liberties taken with the human anatomy are not always those that may be explained by the necessity of emphasized significance. Consequently they divert the mind from the composition as a whole and disturb the integrity of one's impression. The artist has grasped the supreme importance of an integral impression in the matter of color, but in his design he frequently ignores it. He has, however, the refreshing virtue of independence without perversity. His work is not ridden by either contemporary or academic influences.

Percival Rosseau's Bird Dogs.

Many liberties are taken with dogs when the painter accustomed to the portraiture of human beings tries his hand on the canine physiognomy. Percival Rosseau, however, has for his dog subjects a respect equal to that with which the greatest of portrait painters approaches the most notable of sitters. His dogs are bird dogs, trained down to an amazing leanness and strength of limb, and with intelligence in every line of their expressive muzzles. He has managed to show in his pictures not only their admirable fitness for their special work, but the joy with which they approach it. His pointers, "Duke Pointing, Heyday Backing," are tense with the interest and strain of the situation. His "Hal and Lucky," his "Beau and Buss on Singles in North Carolina," his "Setters on Partridge" are all shown in the same mood, that of rapt enthusiasm and efficiency.

The landscape backgrounds are kept subordinated to the animals, but they are appropriate and pleasant in color. The artist's note to the catalogue indicates his own feeling for his special subject: "Can't you feel the snap of the Autumn air?" he writes. "The white frost still in the hollows and shadows, the waving broom sedge or carpet of brown leaves and the dogs! Every nerve tingling, eager to begin—and then, 'Get away, old man! Get away, girl!' Two streaks of setter. A big cast to the right and Hal has found, with Bess backing beautifully his point. Have you ever come up to such a point without feeling a thrill at that magic instinct, that faculty of nose that can find and locate things unseen?" It is not necessary to be a hunter to catch the humor of such an enthusiast when he puts it not only into words, but into paint.

Drawings by Carl Sprinchorn.

At the Scandinavian Art Shop are a number of drawings by Carl Sprinchorn in which a keen vision and a witty analysis of type are adeqnately expressed. In spite of the very great differences of time, tradition, method, and manner separating the two artists, Mr. Sprinchorn's work somewhat suggests Rowlandson. He is a Rowlandson seeing life in fragments and seriously, instead of whole and amusedly, a Rowlandson, too, who sees in angles instead of circles and curves. His hnmor, when it gets into his drawing, is more biting than that of the British caricaturist, and his color is heavier. But he uses a bold pen outline with the same happy result of incisive statement, although more synthetically; he is equally unsparing in his comment on such figures as those in "The Village Satire," he is equally fond of snapping accents of strong, pure color, and he is, above all, like Rowlandson, an observer of significant gesture.

If he has any mannerism, it is one of color; flashing a pale blue or a paler acid yellow into a nentral or modified tone with the effect of an electric display across a brooding Summer sky. In the "Dance of the Fire Sparks" he makes full use of his admirable opportunity for letting crisp orange and green crackle abont the principal masses of dull brownish reds. In the semi-nude figure of "A Roman Fantasy" the dull crimson of the flesh tones is placed in juxtaposition to the orange of a disk and the deep blue of drapery, with an effect of sumptuousness surpassing that of an Urban or Bakst composition in which less reserve is practiced. The main virtue in Mr. Sprinchorn's color is, indeed, its extraordinary reserve. He is amazingly skillful in obtaining the richest and most splendid results by holding back the full force of his pigment, and suggesting reserves of color behind the surface painting.

The exhibition will last through April.

An Instructive Catalogue.

The illustrated catalogue of Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst's loan collection in the Palace of Fine Arts, San Francisco, has just reached the Eastern press for review. It deserves special mention on account of the special care with which it has been prepared with a view to giving it a permanent importance in the literature of the arts.

The collection consists chiefly of tapestries, rugs, and textiles, with smaller sections given to paintings, prints, illuminated manuscripts, glass, and furniture. The descriptlons and comment of the catalogue are furnished by Arthur Upham Pope, R. Meyer-Riefstahl, and Phyllis Ackerman, with a preface by J. Nielson Laurvik, Director of the Palace of Fine Arts, which was taken over from the Panama-Pacific Exposition to become San Francisco's permanent art museum. Mr. Laurvik has edited the catalogue in a way to emphasize the artistic importance of the so-called minor arts and their relation to the major arts, and has inclnded many excellent illustrations in order to make it more valuable as a work of reference.

The division dedicated to rugs and textiles is particularly adapted to the requirements of the general public, indicating many features of a good rug that are easily overlooked, and showing also something of its dependence upon the life and character of the weavers. Thus, in a magnificent Tabriz fragment, one is asked to note the beautiful precision with which the difficult corners of the border pattern are turned, and attention is called in a fine Kien Lung rug to the burning away by long exposure of the overtone of red which has been superimposed upon a dye of soft gold, according to a typical Chinese method of secnring a gentle radiance of color in their finer carpets.

The National Association of Women Painters.

The annual exhibition of the National Association of Women Painters contains a good many pictures that have been seen elsewhere, but it is pre-eminently a cheerful exhibition, devoid of eccentricities, agreeable in color, and for the most part orderly in design. The decorative note is struck with firmness and precision in Alice Worthington Ball's "Rhoda," a young woman in a flowered coat and blue hat, seen against a background of large-patterned chintz. The minor patterns on the coat and chintz are admirably subordinated to the general pattern formed by all the elements of the composition. and the strong black outline, at once detaching and binding together the shapes and masses of color, is efficient without aggressiveness.

The portraits are numerous. That of E. S. L., by Cecilia Beaux, achieves a maximum of effectiveness with a minimum of means. A woman seated wears a black gown. The chair is the color of red coral, a little scumble of yellow is on the canvas back of the head, and elsewhere the gray linen twill of the canvas is left uncovered to play its part in the color scheme.

Hester Miller's large portrait of a young woman, attended by a rather snmptuous array of still-life, tells lmpressively across the gallery, but lacks sensitiveness, especially in the drawing of the hands. Constance Curtis shows a portrait that in itself is charming and reticent, but suffers by an insistent Chinese background. Agnes M. Richmond's portrait of "Alice" is curiously unrelated to the background of houses. Gladys Wiles in "Jeanne" is extremely clever with the planes of the face broadly and boldly described, but her background is wholly deficient in air. Hilda Belcher's "Sketch of an English Woman" is witty and carried through with greater authority than her portrait of "A Poet." Helen C. McClain's "Portrait of N. R. M." shows a fine understanding of planes.

The figure subjects, including the portraits, far ontnumber the landscapes. Alice Beach Winter, in "The Blue Bowl" and "The Peacock Chair," has a knack of picturesque arrangement that falls just short of distinction. Martha Walter's "Mother and Child" is as breezy and positive as this artist's work always is, but the color is more lifeless than usual. Elinor W. Barnard's "The Little Dancer," a muscular child, is excellent water color. There are pleasant familiar subjects by Josephine M. Lewis, Helen M. Turner, Jeanie Gallup Mottet, Lonise B. Mansfield, Mary Spencer, and others. The National Association medal for landscape is taken by Katherine Patton's "Echo Lake, White Mountains," and the award is one that few would dispute.

There is a group of miniatures by well-known artists in this kind and there is a small group of sculpture. Jane Poupelet's beautiful "Femme à sa Toilette" takes the sculpture medal.

The collection as a whole strikes no very individual note in a crowded exhibition season.

Exhibition of Gnild of Book Workers.

This coming week will see the twelfth annnal exhibition of the Guild of Book Workers. The books shown will all be bound by hand in the finest and most substantial manner possible. They will all be covered with the best of leather and decorated with blind or gold tooling, and perhaps a few with mosaic. There will also be bookplates, illuminations, plaster reproductions of old book covers, and possibly some of the materials used in book binding, if the war has not prevented their importation.

This exhibition will be held in the rooms of the Architectural League, the Fine Arts Building, on April 17 to 20, inclusive. Admission free from 10 to 6.

A New Silk Knicker that Stretches With every Step

THE new Marvelfit Italian Silk Knicker (patent applied for) is an improvement on any you have ever known.

These at has a gore of Italian silk fabric inserted on the bias. This gives it a stretch of at least four inches more than that of the ordinary knicker. There are no seams and stitches whatever and the gore stretches with every step. The strain is relieved—these knickers cannot rip, and consequently wear longer than the ordinary kind with the seam.

Pompeian Beauty Powder

TRY to imagine this house as it would look with no shrubbery at all, bare and uninviting,—and you will probably agree with us that its charm would be entirely gone. Not only does the charm of a house depend very much indeed upon the presence of a foundation planting,—but the plants must be wisely chosen and wisely arranged. Even the immediate effect is not the only consideration—plants that look just right at first may grow too tall and require constant "curing." And the factor of expense is important—you may be tempted to buy rare and costly evergreens beyond your purse when there are cheaper plants just as effective for your purpose. Better put your trust in Hicks!—We know how to take care of our patrons!

Sheerest chiffons, lustrous silks come like new from the pure Lux suds

No rubbing to shrink and stiffen woolens. Lux leaves blankets soft and fleecy

Such a lather! Thick and creamy. The delicate flakes dissolve instantly in hot water

Buy the daintiest things - Use them often
Nothing is too delicate for these suds

THE next time you long to purchase some lovely, exquisite blouse or bit of finery, don't hesitate because you're afraid it won't stand laundering.

In the wonderful Lux suds you can wash the sheerest, filmiest fabrics, and they will come out just like new!

Lux suds! You cannot really appreciate how rich and cleansing they are until you actually see them and use them yourself.

There is nothing else like Lux! Lux comes in delicate, transparent flakes. They melt instantly in hot water. You whisk them into rich, creamy suds. Such a lather! Thick and creamy. All white and foamy and bubbling.

Rubbing ruins dainty fabrics

Into these creamy suds you dip your garment. Don't rub—just work the article about briskly in the lather. The dirt dissolves and drops right out into the suds!

Rubbing soap on a delicate material and rubbing it out again is what ruins the fabric. It weakens and breaks the delicate threads.

It twists and pulls the garment out of shape. And in spite of careful rinsing, bits of soap usually cling to the fabric to stain and discolor it.

Lux will not injure the finest materials, won't turn silks yellow, won't injure even chiffons. You can use Lux for anything that water alone will not harm.

Wash these things the Lux way

Silk Curtains	Lace Jabots	Sweaters
Lace Curtains	Satin Collars and Cuffs	Blankets
All Fine Fabrics		Baby's Woolens
Silk Underwear	Georgette and Crepe de Chine Blouses	Fine Table Linens

LUX

Even in hard water, Lux makes wonderful suds

No matter how delicate the fabric, it will come like new from the wonderful Lux suds.

A tablespoonful to a blouse

Simply tumble a tablespoonful of dainty Lux flakes into half a basinful of boiling or very hot water, and whisk into a thick lather. Add cold water until lukewarm. Dip the blouse through the foamy suds many times—squeeze the suds through it. Don't rub. Then rinse three times in clear, lukewarm water. You squeeze the water out—do not wring. Dry it in the shade. When nearly dry, press with a warm iron—never a hot one.

This Lux way is so much easier than the old way of washing. Your dainty clothes will last so much longer—your silks won't lose their soft coloring or turn yellow. Your woolens won't grow hard and stiff.

Never trust your precious things to the old way of washing. Try the Lux way today. Get your package from your grocer, druggist or department store.—Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Does your radiant face cause an exclamation of pleasure?

No matter what other charms you have, they count for little unless you have the greatest of all charms—a clear, fresh skin.

An authority on the skin has said: "Whatever your difficulty is, you can remedy the trouble, if you will only give your skin intelligent care and attention."

Begin this treatment tonight

Just before retiring, wash your face and neck with plenty of Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water. After rinsing your face with warm water, rub a fresh lather of Woodbury's into your skin, using an upward and outward motion. Do this until the skin feels just a little sensitive. Then rinse the skin well in warm water, then in cold, finishing by rubbing for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Always be careful to dry the skin thoroughly.

Make this treatment a regular habit, and in a much shorter time than you would imagine, your skin will respond to the proper care and treatment. You will find a 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment and for general cleansing use for that time. Woodbury's is for sale everywhere in drug stores and at toilet goods counters throughout the United States and Canada.

Write today for a week's size cake

Send 5c and we will send you a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap large enough for a week's use, together with the Woodbury booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," giving many of the famous Woodbury skin treatments. Or for 12c, we will send, in addition, samples of Woodbury's Facial Cream and Facial Powder. Send today.

La-May Face Powder Is Pure!

No White Lead—No Rice Powder

It Really Stays On Unusually Well.

Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to get a face powder to stay on longer than it takes to put it on. You powder your nose nicely and the first gust of wind or the first puff of your handkerchief and away goes the powder, leaving your nose red, shiny and conspicuous, probably just at the very moment when you would give anything to appear at your best. A specialist has at last perfected a pure powder that women say stays on wonderfully well. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder to make it stay on. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores and unsightly complexions. This improved formula contains a medicinal powder doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and irritations. It is also astringent, discouraging flabbiness, crow's feet and wrinkles. To get this unusual powder learn to pronounce the name correctly. It is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Ame). Because it is pure and because it stays on so well, it is already sold everywhere. The large size is only fifty cents and the half size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it so quickly became one of the most popular complexion powders sold in New York. If your home dealer is sold out you can order by mail of Herbert Roystone, 14 E. 18th St., New York.

RADIO SEARCH UNAVAILING

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The Navy Department announced tonight that the United States naval collier Cyclops, bound from Brazil for the United States with a crew of fifteen officers and 221 men, fifty-seven passengers, and a cargo of manganese, has been missing since March 4, and has been overdue at an Atlantic port since March 13. The announcement points to the probability that a German raider or submarine has been operating within the last month somewhere between Cuba and the coast of Brazil. Hope for the safety of the Cyclops and the 293 persons on board has been abandoned.

That the Navy Department is satisfied that the Cyclops has been lost is evident from the fact that before announcing late this afternoon the names of the officers and men on board the vessel the department in its messages to the next of kin informed them of its belief that the Cyclops was lost.

Among the passengers on board the Cyclops was Alfred L. M. Gottschalk, well known in New York City. He was the American Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and was returning to the United States from his post of duty. The passenger list given out by the Navy Department contains the name of "Maurice Gottschalk, Consul General from the United States to Rio de Janeiro." As there was only one Gottschalk in the Consular service, Alfred L. M. Gottschalk, and he was Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, officials are satisfied that the name of the Consul General has been twisted in cabling, but decided to make it public as received.

Doubt She Was Lost in Gale.

The weather in the area which the Cyclops was scheduled to traverse from the West Indies, where she touched on March 4, to the United States has not been bad enough to warrant the belief that the collier foundered in a gale. If there had been unusually heavy gales along the path that the steamer was due to follow that would have been the natural assumption of the reason for the vessel's delay in arriving. The collier was well equipped with wireless. If caught in a storm radio distress calls could have been sent unless the wireless mast went down suddenly.

It is considered highly probable that the Cyclops was the victim of a raider, and perhaps of a German submarine. The Navy Department, in announcing the loss of the steamer, merely says, after hinting at the possibility of a raider or submarine having been responsible for the loss, that "there have been no reports that would indicate the presence of either in the locality in which the Cyclops was."

But it is known that German raiders during the last two years, generally in the Spring, have made successful round-trip voyages from their German home ports to the coast of Brazil, and Germany now has submarines capable of going to the West Indies and returning. The Jacob Jones, an American destroyer, was sunk by such a raider, which went all the way to the Cape Verde Islands, off the coast of Africa, a voyage almost as long as to the West Indies or the Brazilian coast.

Another theory advanced in connection with the disappearance of the Cyclops is that the vessel may have been destroyed by an explosion, either of her own boilers or through the placing of a bomb or explosives in the cargo of manganese. Manganese is considered first class cargo on account of its importance in the manufacture of steel, and it was suggested that possibly German agents might have placed explosives in it. This suggestion was not made by an official on the basis of any information received, but merely as a speculative explanation as to how the Cyclops might have been lost.

No Answer to Radio Calls.

The most significant feature of the Cyclops case is that no radio call of distress has ever been received, and no response has been made to the radio

504 British Officers in List of the Dead and Missing

LONDON, April 15.—A casualty list published by the War Office contains the names of 504 officers. Seventy-nine of these were killed, 285 died of wounds, and 140 are missing.

Presumably this is the first casualty list from the heavy fighting in France in the last three weeks.

FEAR OF A PEACE BY FORCE

Settlement Is Advocated That Will Not Alienate American and British Aid.

By GEORGE RENWICK.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, April 14.—Desperate financial conditions and prospects in Austria-Hungary are depicted in an article in the Vienna Arbeiter Zeitung.

The Dual Monarchy's debt to Germany alone, estimated at more than £500,000,000, will be greatly increased at the end of the war and the writer thinks it correct to say that the interest payable will amount to at least £28,000,000 yearly. Germany is not the only creditor, and the interest on other foreign loans will have to be paid after the war.

"How can we pay those vast amounts?" the article asks. "With gold? We have no gold. With goods? But our exports are only a small fraction of the vast amount of raw material and foodstuffs, which we shall need from abroad to set up our industry again.

"Can we borrow from Germany? No. Germany will not be in a position to lend us money, for she will be in the same state as we. She will need her milliards to buy raw materials and food for herself. Holland and Switzerland are small countries. France will need her money to restore her wasted territories. There remain England and America."

That being so, the journal insists primarily on the American door being kept open to Austria-Hungary, and says that can only be done by a democratic peace. The peace of force advocated by the German Imperialists and their Austrian imitators would shut off the country from the foreign money market, and "make it impossible to get raw materials and food, and thus result in the collapse of our industries, lasting unemployment, and hunger for generations."

HEROES TO BE CHEATED, SAYS VORWAERTS

Warriors Who Have Advanced in the West to Have No Political Gains at Home.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, April 14.—Vorwärts points out that the heroes of Armentières have received a rebuff for their sacrifices by the rejection of the ballot reform commission. This Berlin paper says:

"The military reports speak of the sacrifice and bravery of the heroes in the west, who went through almost impassable fields of mud and crater-holes. No one who has not been there knows at what a cost, but what awaits them on the other side? Not the English, but the Prussian reactionaries who will thrust them into new mudfields, the swamps of political injustice, and this will be the reward of war service for war aims."

Vorwärts goes on to say that those who enrich themselves during the war will count, but those who have bled will not count, and that the victory messages of the last weeks do not give the impression that the heroes will get what was promised them.

FOE AFTER CHANNEL PORTS

His Plan to Destroy British Army Fully Revealed in Dead Officer's Diary.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS, April 14.—The Commander in Chief's order of the day should reveal to the British people and to the world what is happening out here in France—the enemy's object to seize the Channel ports and destroy the British army, and the frightful forces he has brought against it to achieve that plan, and the call that has come to the troops to hold every position to the last man. "Many among us now are tired. . . . With our back to the wall each one of us must fight to the end."

Yes, and the men are tired, so tired after weeks of fighting after these last days and nights that they can hardly stagger up to resist another attack, yet they do so because their spirit wakes again above their bodily fatigue; so tired that they go on fighting like sleep-walkers, and in any respite lie in ditches and under hedges and in open fields under fire in deep slumber until the shouts of their Sergeants stir them again.

Some of these men have been fighting since March 21 with only a few days' rest. You know what the battalions of the 51st Division have done since that day, fighting all the way back from the St. Quentin front before holding back the German hordes from the way to Bethune. The 9th Division has done as much and as long, and after all their desperate fighting down from Gonnelieu and Gauche Wood to Montauban and Mametz this new battle burst upon them and they flung the enemy off Messines Ridge and barred the way with their bodies.

Some Battalions in Many Actions.

Some of the English battalions through all that first phase in the south, where they fought scores of rearguard actions with the enemy on both flanks, not sleeping for days and nights, have snared in these northern battles and fought as Sir Douglas Haig has asked them to fight, with their "backs to the wall," often in outposts and "keeps, at bridgeheads and crossroads, in bombarded villages and towns. They fought back from house and street in Laventie and Merville and Estaires, in Steenwerck and Nieppe and Merris, and Bailleul and Bethune.

Their losses have not been light in this heroic fighting. England and Scotland must steel their hearts to this sacrifice of their sons. The enemy still storms against them with fresh men, always fresh men, in overwhelming numbers. Little groups are left out of gallant companies, but these bands of brothers have no surrender in their souls, and if they yield it is to death.

The dreadful scene of war closes in and draws nearer to places not long ago outside the zone, engulfing dear towns and villages wherein the British soldiers lived behind the lines, familiar among the people of Merville, with its Flemish gables, old inns, and old houses and dainty shops, now shelled to ruin and the streets littered with dead.

Into stately Bailleul with its bell-shaped tower and great market square and solid old houses built for merchant princes of the sixteenth century the enemy is flinging enormous shells, and yesterday when I went that way to the villages around all the storm of battle was centred there, and there was a dreadful sweep of fire bearing down on Merris close by, and down the road for miles came the people of Bailleul streaming away from that city in which their homes were being smashed by high explosives.

Night an Inferno.

I have told how yesterday in the sunlight of a golden day of Spring with all nature singing over the fields, I saw the fires of war burning and high columns of smoke rising from Flemish villages.

That night the scene of war became infernal up in Flanders. It was a clear, starlight night and for miles around it was lit by flames of burning farms and ammunition dumps, and all this pale sky was filled with the wild glare of fires and by the flash of guns.

German air raiders came out, dropping bombs. The sound of their engines was a droning song overhead, and the British shrapnel winked and flashed about them. Flights of British airplanes went out over positions, and the night was noisy with explosions as they dropped tons of bombs over the German troops.

To people living in the villages of Flanders, from which one can see the whole sweep of the battleline, that night was full of terror, and from the windows they watched the burning of places from which they had escaped and the bonfires of their homes, and these refugees while sleeping with children at their breast wept.

Yesterday the weather changed. There was no sunlight in the sky. It was leaden gray, with a northeast wind howling, and over all the fields a dense white fog. I went to places where, if there had been any clearness, I could have seen every shell burst and the whole range of battle, but now I could see nothing of it.

A Drama of Noise.

It was a drama of noise, beating against one's ears and against one's heart, and it was a strange, terrible thing to stand there, blind, as it were,

Baden Deputies Want Agreement to Stop Air Raids

AMSTERDAM, April 14.—A Karlsruhe dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung reports the passage by the Chamber of the Grand Duchy of Baden of a resolution requesting the Imperial German Government to endeavor to secure a general agreement for the cessation of hostile air raids on places outside the zone of military operations.

Germans Buying American Money in Berne, Probably in Effort to Boost Mark Exchange

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, April 14.—Germany is purchasing all the available American paper money here, which she is importing at the rate of several millions weekly from neutrals. Recently the exchange rate for paper money was the same as for checks—435 francs per $100. Because of the German demand the rate for paper money has jumped to 637 francs per $100.

Germany is using every possible agency to get American money out of France. Last week an American messenger who had been traveling weekly between Paris and Berne was caught bringing several thousand dollars into Switzerland, where he had been accustomed to sell to German agents.

American officials have warned Washington to place an export prohibition on paper money as the French have done, because Germany is using American and allied paper money to maintain the exchange rate on the mark.

Germans Can't Get Gold for Paper.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Commenting upon the Berne dispatch reporting that Germany is buying up American paper money, a Treasury official said tonight that if it were true, Germany could not receive gold in return for gold certificates represented by paper.

It was also pointed out by this official that very little American paper money is circulated abroad. He said that he could not see any advantage which Germany could obtain by such a procedure.

Under the Trading with the Enemy act the President has power to prohibit the exportation of gold and silver. By a proclamation he has delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury the carrying out of this feature of the law. Exportation of gold and silver is now prohibited except by a license.

Therefore, in the opinion of this Treasury official, the reported buying up of the little American paper money that may be in Europe would be nullified so far as the obtaining of gold and silver from this country represented by the paper was concerned. As far as could be ascertained tonight the Government has not been informed of this reported move of Germany.

AMERICANS HURL BACK FOE

FIERCE HAND-TO-HAND FIGHT

25 of Our Troops, Surrounded, Suddenly Attack Germans and Get Away.

TWO ATTACKS ON SATURDAY

Nearly 200 Germans Killed in Five Days' Fighting—Many Deeds of Heroism.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, April 14, (Associated Press.)—Preceded by an intense bombardment of high explosives and poison gas shells, picked troops from four German companies hurled themselves against the American positions on the right bank of the Meuse north of St. Mihiel early this morning, but were completely repulsed after terrific hand-to-hand fighting.

The Americans captured some prisoners. The German losses already counted are thirty-four dead and ten wounded, who were in the American trenches, and thirty dead in No Man's Land. Several of the wounded enemy were taken back by their comrades to the German positions.

A concentrated artillery fire on the American position in the St. Mihiel sector began Saturday morning. It was resumed with increased vigor just before midnight and continued intermittently until nearly daybreak.

Germans Leap to Attack.

The Germans then laid down a barrage and leaped over the parapets and reached the American front line trenches closely behind the barrage. At this moment the American infantry burst from their shelters, attacking the enemy with grenades and bayonet.

The struggle continued back and forth for some time, but over most of the front involved the American troops were completely victorious, as was evident from the heavy toll of enemy dead and wounded.

At another point a large enemy force surrounded twenty-five Americans in front of their trenches. The Americans suddenly attacked and killed several of the Germans and returned to their trenches uninjured and bringing prisoners.

The American troops northwest of Toul again were subjected to a violent artillery bombardment Saturday night. The American batteries sent back an equal number of shells. The Germans then made no further attempt to penetrate the lines.

Praised by French General.

The French General commanding the troops in a neighboring sector personally congratulated the principal American unit's commander today on the excellent offensive qualities and the splendid resistance of the American troops.

"With such men the cause of the Allies is sure to triumph," the French General wrote in his report to the French Army Headquarters.

The doctors in the front-line dressing stations reported today that several Americans who were slightly wounded refused medical treatment until the Germans had been driven back to their trenches. One man with a slight wound in his hand who was ordered to the rear later was found, according to the surgeons, "fighting like a tiger" in the front line.

One German Red Cross man captured in an enemy dugout was found to be heavily armed, notwithstand-

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 14.—That another great stride forward has been taken toward the realization of absolute unity of command on the western front is evident to those who can read between the lines of a bald announcement which appears this evening in the Temps. It reads:

"The British Government and the French Government have agreed to give General Foch the title of Commander in Chief of the Allied Armies operating in France."

The announcement has given intense satisfaction in France, in view of the situation at the front at the present moment, but anything like detailed comment on it is, of course, impossible, owing to the censorship restrictions. The facts of the situation, however, speak for themselves.

In Paris it is generally recognized that Field Marshal Haig's spirited order to his troops has already had its effect. The British have held out stubbornly, and have so far rendered vain the enemy's efforts to break through between Hazebrouck and Ypres.

The German object, of course, is to break the British line before French troops can effectively come to the rescue, and this is the reason for the powerful offensive which was begun yesterday afternoon between the Meteren-Becque streamlet and Wulverghem. Attacking on a front of between nine and ten miles, the Germans are making a desperate effort, but news received this afternoon shows that the British are holding the ground well.

Experts here incline to the view that the road to Calais and Dunkirk is now barred to the Germans, not only as a consequence of the long and stubborn resistance of the British, but from the fact that General Foch is now within measurable distance of being able to throw in a very substantial number of French divisions, which will render a further German advance practically impossible.

Haig has been for the last few days in very much the same position as Wellington at Waterloo while waiting for Blücher to come up. When things looked most critical, Wellington issued orders that his troops were to hold on to the last man. The British held on that occasion as they are holding today, and in due course Blücher arrived, as Foch's French will arrive, or perhaps already have done.

BERLIN REPORTS GAINS ON THE LYS

Announces Capture of Neuve Eglise and the Repulse of Counterattacks.

CLAIMS TWO MORE TOWNS

Merris and Vieux Berquin Said to be Part of Conquests on Nine-Mile Front.

BERLIN, April 14, (via London.)—German troops have gained ground on the Lys battlefront after hard fighting, says a statement from General Headquarters, which reports the capture of Nieuwerkerke [Neuve Eglise] and the repulse of British counterattacks and the taking of the villages of Merris and Vieux Berquin, [southwest of Bailleuk.]

The evening official statement reports successful engagements between Neuve Eglise and Vieux Berquin, [which are about nine miles apart.]

The collapse of a French attack against Hainvilliers [southeast of Montdidier] is also reported.

Following is the text of the earlier report:

On the Lys battlefront we gained ground, as a result of hard fighting. South of the Douve River General Eberhardt's troops penetrated the enemy's position southwest of Wulverghem and took Nieuwerkerke [Flemish form of Neuve Eglise] by storm after a desperate struggle with bodies of British troops, who counterattacked.

An attack carried through in the evening hours under the leadership of General Maercken brought us into possession of a height to the west of the town.

Enemy forces which were pushing forward toward the battlefront sustained heavy losses by our fire, which was effectively directed by ground and air observations.

On the battlefront on both sides of the Somme there have been artillery duels. An attack by several French battalions against Hainvilliers sanguinarily collapsed. Numerous prisoners remained in our hands.

In aerial battles during the last few days thirty-seven enemy airplanes and three captive balloons were shot down. Lieutenant Menckof won his twenty-fourth aerial victory.

The evening statement from General Headquarters says:

On the Lys battlefield there have been successful engagements between Nieuwerkerke and Vieux Berquin.

FOCH STILL WAITS TIME TO STRIKE

Observer with French Armies Thinks the Decisive Moment Hasn't Arrived.

"WORST AND BEST TO COME"

Confident That the Allies Will Reap Victory from Their Fabian Policy.

By G. H. PERRIS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, April 14.—The world stands, as it were, between the second and third acts of the supreme tragedy of our times. Over the greater part of the field of the German offensive there is a pause heavy with omens, and, save for some local convulsions, this pause has lasted for a fortnight. What does it mean? What does it portend? The air is electric today with the sense of an impending climax.

The question of what tomorrow may reveal is of such interest that I shall ignore the relatively small actions passing on the front in order to attempt to help the reader toward a broad view of the whole situation.

If, as I believe, the worst as well as the best, is yet to come, we shall need all our courage to win through this last black valley, and it is only in seeing the battle and its meaning as a whole that sound encouragement can be found.

Some persons, more imaginative than enlightened, picture the great chiefs, Foch and Hindenburg, like boxers in the final round, straining each to discern the other's intentions, knowing that the crisis has come, but hesitating, if not from fear of the issue, then in the hope of catching the other in a false move. It is a feeble and fallacious analogy, but there is this element of truth in it: that, if we want to know where the next German blow will fall, very much more does the German Grand Staff want to know what we mean to do—very much more, because much of the German plan is already revealed, whereas our strategic reply is a perfectly guarded secret. As I do not know it, I cannot give it away.

The German command has not shown its whole program. Its reserve is not fully deployed; its striking force has not been sufficiently worn down, and therefore, severe though the pressure be here or there, the moment for definitive intervention has not arrived, despite the efforts of the enemy to broaden his front of attack.

Interesting situations are developing. The men who bear the burden of the Fabian defense may be sure that their sacrifice will not be in vain and that Foch's cool brain and

HAIG CHECKS ASSAULTS

Inflicts Heavy Losses on Germans Who Repeatedly Attack Neuve Eglise.

FOE FAILS NEAR BAILLEUL

British Thwart Attempts to Advance Near That Town and Village of Merris.

GUNS DISPERSE ASSAILANTS

Germans Northwest of Merville Caught Under the Fire of British Artillery.

LONDON, April 14.—The battle on the Lys front continued without abatement last night and today, the most determined German attacks being directed against Neuve Eglise, [about three miles southwest of Messines Ridge,] which remains in British hands. The Germans are reported to have lost heavily in their repeated attacks in this sector, where fighting is still in progress.

This morning the Germans attacked near Bailleul and Merris, [about three miles to the southwest,] but were beaten back. An infantry assault near Merville, a few miles further south, was caught under the fire of the British guns and dispersed.

Last night British troops repulsed a German attack in the neighborhood of Festubert, [northwest of La Bassée.]

Following is the text of the night bulletin:

At the close of many hours of obstinate fighting during the night and again the morning about Neuve Eglise our troops remained in possession of the village. The enemy's attacks in this sector have been pressed with great determination, and his losses throughout have been heavy.

Today the enemy renewed his attempts to gain possession of the village and the fighting continues.

An attack commenced by the enemy early in the morning in the neighborhood of Bailleul was repulsed by our troops, and another hostile attack which developed later in the morning in the neighborhood of Merris was equally unsuccessful.

During the morning hostile infantry also attempted an attack northwest of Merville, but was caught and dispersed by our artillery.

The hostile artillery has been more active today in the neighborhood of Albert.

On the remainder of the British front there was nothing of special interest.

The text of the afternoon statement is as follows:

After heavy fighting lasting throughout the evening, strong attacks launched by the enemy yesterday afternoon from Meteren to Wulverghem were repulsed.

Early in the night the enemy again attacked at Neuve Eglise for the fourth time during the day and once more was repulsed.

In addition to the attacks already reported, the enemy made a determined attempt yesterday evening against our defenses in the neighborhood of Festubert and was beaten off.

On this portion of the battlefront and northwestward as far as Locon numerous bodies of hostile troops were effectively engaged during the evening at short range by our infantry and artillery fire.

At the end of the day of continuous fighting and frequent assaults, many of them delivered with great strength on all parts of the Lys battlefront, our line was reported to be intact.

The enemy's losses throughout yesterday's fighting are reported to have been most severe.

In the course of the night fighting were renewed about Neuve Eglise, and this morning the enemy recommenced his attacks in the neighborhood of Bailleul. Fighting is continuing on this front.

Drop Bombs on Advancing Germans.

"On Saturday it was cloudy and misty," says an official statement on aerial operations tonight, "but our low-flying machines dropped 1,200 bombs on enemy troops on roads leading to the front. Only a few fights occurred, and the results were indecisive. One of our machines is missing."

BRITISH STAND FIRM BEFORE LYS ATTACKS

Blocking Fierce Assaults of 230,000 Germans on 20-Mile Front.

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, April 14, (Associated Press.)—This morning found the British holding firmly in the critical Bailleul-Merville sector after a night of the most intense fighting, during which numerous heavy enemy attacks were repulsed and the invaders were driven from Robecq, (about 4½ miles southwest of Merville,) by a counterstrake.

The Germans today were continuing to drive forward in masses against the defending positions which block their way to Hazebrouck, with its railway lines, but at the latest reports the British lines had not wavered in the face of the terrific onslaughts by superior numbers.

While no one could predict the outcome of the fierce battle now raging, the British position this morning seemed more firm and settled than at any period since the Germans began their onslaught west of Armentières.

The enemy attacks in this region have been carried out with steadily increasing forces. The troops employed on the opening day were few, as compared with those now in the attacking.

17 German Divisions Attacking.

Between St. Venant and the Ypres-Comines Canal, [a distance of about twenty miles,] the enemy last night had at least seventeen divisions, [about 230,000 men,] in line, with six more divisions held in reserve.

There has been no cessation in the desperate work which has been going forward since April 9. All last night the opposing forces struggled at close quarters at numerous points, and when daylight came the Germans launched two more tremendous drives, one south of Bailleul and Materen, and the other against the bloodstained zone about Neuve-Eglise.

"We are holding," was the cheering import of the news received by the correspondent of The Associated Press about noon concerning the sector involved. The fighting about Neuve Eglise yesterday and last night was continuous and sanguinary.

In the course of the day the enemy launched three separate attacks against this place, and each time was hurled back without making any gains. At 7:30 o'clock yesterday evening the Germans again surged forward, but they came under such cruel punishment from machine guns and rifles that they were forced to fall back. This was only an introduction to the night's work. Throughout the long, dark hours the battle continued, and when daylight came it proceeded with added fury as the enemy rushed up fresh troops and flung them against the grimly holding British.

It is hard to conceive how the comparatively weak forces of the British have been able to withstand these heavy shocks, especially in view of the fact that the Germans continually kept bringing new troops into action against the long-suffering defenders. But they have held, and the record of the defense in the Merville-Bailleul sector will form one of the most graphic chapters in the history of the war.

Slight German Gain Near Bailleul.

The fighting south of Bailleul has differed little from that at other points. The Germans made a heavy push here last night about Merris, but could make little progress. The British gave a tiny bit of ground below Meolenacker, but the situation was virtually unaltered. This morning the enemy again began his vicious strokes here.

Southwest of Vieux Berquin yesterday the Germans made four big attacks, accompanied by an intense bombardment. The onslaught was a terrific one, and there was at that time only one British brigade facing several divisions of Germans. How the British held probably they themselves could not tell today. But they did hold, although their line bent a little in places. The German casualties in this sector yesterday were appalling.

A heavy concentration of Germans about Neuf Berquin, who were about to be employed in an assault against a long-suffering British brigade, were caught in an artillery barrage and literally ripped to pieces. For two hours the British shells plowed through the enemy ranks, and veritable slaughter resulted.

The same sort of thing has been going on for days. Prisoners verify statements that the British harassing fire is frightful. For two nights before the Germans began their present drive west of Armentières the British artillery worked havoc. Prisoners say that when the advance started they had to walk over bodies and the wreckage of munition and supply wagons.

Another instance occurred on the 11th northeast of Estairee, where British riflemen killed so many of the enemy that the advancing troops were piling up bodies and using them as protection against the fire.

The first wave of the attacking troops thus far in the fighting almost invariably has been broken, and often the second wave has been smashed. This is expected by the enemy, who depends upon subsequent waves for success.

British airmen continue to do marvelous work in fighting the enemy at close quarters. Not only are they doing great execution in bombing roads and congested traffic, but they have been swooping down into the mouths of machine-guns, and engaging infantry with their rapid-firers.

Battles in the air are numerous, and thus far the British have maintained vast superiority in this method of warfare.

HAIG'S FORCES INCREASING.

Inflict Huge Losses Upon Fresh German Masses Pushing Forward.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 14.—"A bitter east wind is raging in Flanders, and visibility is very low," says Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters in France in a dispatch received here tonight. "The situation is generally unchanged. The enemy continues to employ fresh troops, and we are likewise steadily increasing our forces. Consequently the battle is more stationary, although as intense as ever.

"Yesterday morning the Germans launched a heavy attack against a length of front they have been attacking continuously and unsuccessfully for the past two days, undoubtedly calculating that the British were worn out, and that another smashing blow would finish us. But, fresh reinforcements helping, the defenders flung back the enemy with terrible losses.

"The methods of the enemy attack make absolutely inevitable his heavy losses. His formula for shock tactics consists in pushing forward in succession dense waves at close intervals, and as the front line is killed off the others press on by sheer weight of the men behind. Frequently his advance has been checked by the barrier of piled-up corpses.

"Our rearguard fighting has been skillful and valiant beyond words. While the machine gunners holding a series of little posts have poured bullets into the enemy until their ammunition has been exhausted, the main body has slowly fallen back upon prepared positions.

"Each backward step has been made methodically, and we have exacted the full price for what we have yielded.

Troops Fight with Superb Courage.

"Never have troops fought with such superb courage and tenacity as our men are now displaying. They have got their backs to the wall, indeed, and Field Marshal Haig's assurance of French support in great strength has vastly heartened them. The British have learned to value the fighting qualities of the poilu. The French are indeed magnificent; their morale is conspicuously one of irresistible confidence.

"The enemy is apparently endeavoring to gain command of the line of communications between Bailleul and the north. He is fighting desperately with a mechanical bravery and iron discipline. It is also apparent that the enemy is hoping to envelop the big forest of Nieppe by thrusting through Hazebrouck and thence southward, but the latest intelligence shows that he is progressing very little in this direction. Our resistance at certain points along the line of advance is balking the plan. After the fourth repulse at Neuve Eglise last night the enemy maintained a heavy pressure around the place, gaining a little ground at a few points east of the village.

Yesterday's official bulletins indicate only slight changes in the relative positions of the combatants on the Lys front. The heaviest fighting was on the line running from Neuve Eglise southwest to Vieux Berquin, a distance of about nine miles. Berlin reports the capture of both these villages and that of Merris, but the British War Office asserts that the first mentioned is still in Haig's possession, and that his men have checked German assaults in the neighborhood of Bailleul and Merris.

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

The situation in the battle of Flanders can be stated very briefly. If the British can hold their lines on the northern and southern side of the wedge which the Germans have driven into their lines, the Germans are placed in a serious predicament, which only grows more serious the further west they penetrate. If, on the other hand, the British give way on the north, the present positions on the Wytschaete Ridge and with it the Passchendaele Ridge must be abandoned. In this case Ypres will almost certainly fall, and the way will be opened to Calais. If the British on the southern side give way the positions at Vimy Ridge and on the Notre Dame de Lorette will be taken in reverse, and must be given up. This will uncover the British line at Bucquoy, and the wedge in the south which the Germans are driving at Amiens and at Abbeville further on will be greatly widened, extending from a point north of the Lys River to the Avre River in Picardy. The possibility of the Germans reaching the sea over this route will then be greatly increased.

Several days ago, the fact was mentioned that jutting westward from the Wytschaete Ridge there is a still lower ridge, shaped roughly like a fish hook. The shank of the hook is the connection with the Wytschaete Ridge. On the barb of the hook, almost at its point, lies the little town of Neuve Eglise. The curve of the hook consists of a group of hills, several of which rise in relatively sharp spurs from three to five hundred feet above the surrounding country. It is this hook which has prevented the Germans from flanking the British positions along the Wytschaete Ridge.

From the town of Messines the British line turns almost at right angles, and, running along the road from Messines to Neuve Eglise, passes practically through the latter place. From there it continues westward, crossing the Bailleul railroad to the south of the city. If the lay of the land favored Germany, or if indeed it were neutral, the Wytschaete Ridge would have to be abandoned. The danger of the Germans breaking through on the north, or even of pressing the British troops further back would be so great that to hold the Wytschaete positions would be to tempt fate and invite disaster. But all of the advantages of terrain lie with the British.

If the Wytschaete Ridge positions give way from Messines to Wytschaete, even then it is doubtful whether the Germans would have gained a victory which would be of vital advantage to them. The British lines in such a case would run westward from Wytschaete and through the more lofty hills of Mont Kemmel, Mont Rouge and Mont Vidaigne. It is this line which determines whether Germany shall reach Calais.

The Germans have established their lines on the barb of the hook, ascending its gentle slopes to Neuve Eglise, and have either taken that town or are fighting on its southern edge. The fighting here has been equaled only by that at Messines and Wytschaete. The Germans cannot drive their troops into the narrow wedge of low land between the barb and the shank of the hook, and so flank the Neuve Eglise position from the rear. This would be merely to push in a narrow wedge which, from the two high positions which overlook it on both north and south, would be soon cut to pieces. They must therefore take the barb of the hook by frontal attack—that is, by attack from the south.

Even then, however, their task is not complete. There is still the much higher ridge to the north which must be scaled.

On the south the British have no such immediate advantage. From Bethune a line of heights runs westward, the average height of which is about 250 feet higher than the surrounding country. But these are some distance behind the British line as yet, and will not have been reached until a considerable further retirement is made. Long before this ridge is reached, however, the lines about Arras as they are at present will have become untenable. The danger here will be the same as it would be on the north if the Mont Kemmel positions were lost. The entire line would be threatened with destruction or capture.

The British position on the whole is most serious, but by no means desperate. This week will probably see the end of the Flanders fighting one way or the other. It is impossible that the German attacks should continue on their present scale. Their object must be achieved or they must be worn out by their own ferocity. At the same time there is no present indication of their abatement.

The Germans, it is indicated by captured orders published elsewhere this morning, are not attacking where they wish to attack, but where the check they received along the Somme forced them to attack. If they are defeated here as they have been up to date on the Somme and the Avre, they can but oscillate between the two, hoping to effect a breach somewhere. But the Allies, knowing the two points where the attacks if continued must fall, will have deprived the Germans of the advantages of selection and surprise which they have heretofore held.

ONLY ARTILLERY DUELS ON THE FRENCH FRONT

No Infantry Action Yesterday—Guns Most Active Between Montdidier and Noyon.

PARIS, April 14.—Lively artillery activity during last night on the front between Montdidier and Noyon, where the French also have been actively conducting reconnoitring operations, is reported in the afternoon War Office statement. Otherwise, except for raids here and there, the front was quiet. There was no infantry action today, according to the night report. The text of the afternoon statement reads:

The activity of the artillery was somewhat lively between Montdidier and Noyon. French reconnoitring parties operating in this region brought in prisoners.

North of St. Mihiel and in Lorraine in the region of Embermenil and Bures the French penetrated the German lines and took half a score of prisoners.

The French repulsed tentative raids by the Germans north of Hill 304, (Verdun front,) in the region of St. Mihiel, in the Woevre, and at Col du Bonhomme.

The night was quiet on the remainder of the front.

The War Office announcement tonight says:

The day was marked only by reciprocal bombardments at various points along the front. There was no infantry action

EXPRESS CONFIDENCE IN HAIG.

But Some London Papers Fear Messines Positions Have Been Turned.

OTTAWA, Ontario, April 15.—"Field Marshal Haig's appeal to his troops has greatly stirred the nation," says a Reuter dispatch from London received here tonight, "indicating that the struggle has reached a point that may even be decisive. It forms the text of articles in the newspapers urging every man and woman in the British Isles to take it to heart, while breathing confidence that the armies which already have proved their mettle will leave nothing undone that men can do, and that with the French rushing to their aid they will yet save the day.

"Emphasizing the gravity of the position, some of the papers point out that the enemy is now only thirty miles from Dunkirk and forty from Calais, while apparently the positions at Messines Ridge have been turned, and the whole northern army's communications are imperiled.

"Others, a little more hopeful, point out that the more German divisions are engaged the easier will be Foch's task. They state that it is still too soon to assume that a direct thrust in the north for the Channel ports has become the enemy's major operation.

"The increased activity of the German military forces astride the Somme points to a renewal of the contest on a larger scale. The Times states that General Plumer, who commands the northern wing, is on ground thoroughly familiar to him.

"Paris newspapers unanimously praise Field Marshal Haig's order of the day, which they say has been immediately answered with virile energy by the heoric British troops. Marcel Hutin, in the Echo de Paris, says the road to Calais and Dunkirk is henceforth closed to the Germans.

"The Matin says the tenacity of the British resistance undoubtedly enables the dominating positions which form the barrier between the River Lys and the Dunkirk road to be put in a state of defense.

"The Excelsior points out that the Anglo-French reserves have not yet been engaged. The battle is only beginning, and the allied high command has its own reasons for letting the enemy exhaust himself. The German losses, already excessive, may at any moment become serious."

FIRST LINE CAN'T RETREAT.

German Second and Third Waves Force It On After Recoil.

LONDON, April 15.—The machine gun is the dominating feature of the present open fighting southwest of Ypres, says the correspondent of The Daily Mail at British Headquarters, and the issue of local battles often turns on the answer to the question of which side can get his machine guns into commanding positions first.

Just south of St. Floris, on the Lys Canal toward Merville, British troops rushed a brick field and were clearing it of Germans, and would have killed them all but for a machine gun posted near by. The correspondent continues:

"The idea behind the German plan in sending troops forward in successive waves at intervals of about 100 yards appears to be that under such conditions retirement is almost impossible. A British officer explained to the correspondent:

"'We nearly always break the first line. It would fall back, but it cannot, as the second wave comes up and carries it forward again. There is a movement of recoil then, but by this time the third wave is advancing, and on comes the attack once more.'

"Thus the Germans by deliberately sacrificing large numbers are able sometimes to make little gaps in our line."

A party of refugees from Bailleul reports that the town is burning.

Swiss Punish Swoboda.

GENEVA, April 14.—The Federal Penal Tribunal has condemned Raymond Swoboda, who claimed American citizenship when arrested last Winter in Switzerland on an espionage charge, to ten months' imprisonment, payment of a fine of 2,500 francs, and two years' exclusion from the country.

ROME, April 14.—The letter of Emperor Charles of Austria to Prince Sixtus of Bourbon continues to be the object of wide comment in political circles.

It is stated that Emperor Charles several times tried to enter negotiations with Italy, through relatives of his wife, who, as is well known, belongs to the Parma branch of the Bourbon family, which lost the Ducal crown of Parma when after the war of 1859 the Duchy was annexed to the Kingdom of Sardinia. The Bourbons continued to live in Italy in the beautiful Villa Pianore, near Pisa, where the present Austrian Empress was born and lived many years.

The steps which the Austrian Emperor took regarding Italy failed because of the staunch Italian loyalty to the Allies. It was then that he addressed himself to his brother-in-law, Prince Sixtus, who was fighting in the allied army on the western front, but was no more successful.

For this reason the Pope on Aug. 1 issued his peace note, which was practically a repetition of the conditions contained in Emperor Charles's letter to Prince Sixtus. It is now evident that the Pope relied on Emperor Charles's opinion regarding the "just French claims concerning Alsace-Lorraine," but he was less explicit in his peace note being an official document.

ROME, April 14.—The Italian press, commenting on the controversy that has arisen between M. Clemenceau and Count Czernin, insists that at the time Emperor Charles wrote to Prince Sixtus of Bourdon another letter was sent to the Pope.

The Idea Nazionale says that the second letter was designed to complete, as relating to Italy, the first letter as relating to France, and had for its object invoking the intervention of the Holy See in favor of peace.

The Tribuna says that it was all a part of a vast "pacific offensive" on the part of Austria and Germany and that it was a joint movement to deceive both France and the Vatican.

According to another source, the letter to the Pope was written by Empress Zita.

BREAK FROM REICHSTAG PEACE RESOLUTION

Hertling Orders Centre Party to Repudiate Erzberger and His Policy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, April 14.—The Tägliche Rundschau gives great prominence to a curious statement regarding the Imperial Chancellor and the Reichstag peace resolution. A few days ago, it declares, the Rhineland Centre Party met—Hertling belong to the Centre Party—and there was conveyed to the meeting a statement from the Chancellor that he would resign if the party did not break away from the Erzberger peace policy, that is the policy of the Reichstag majority parties as expressed in the July resolution. The meeting therefore passed a resolution saying there could now be no question of peace without "territorial quantities" and indemnities as far as the Western enemies were concerned.

The journal adds by way of confirmation of this that the Chancellor has so far broken with Erzberger that he will not receive this champion of peace without annexations and indemnities.

Political warfare in the Fatherland has been further embittered by the rejection for the second time of the equal franchise for Prussia by the constitution committee of the Prussian lower house.

"By this rejection," says the Vorwärts, "the victors of Armentières receive a box on the ears as thanks."

Democratic papers predict a great political battle over the question and a possible dissolution of the House.

AMSTERDAM, April 14.—The Tägliche Rundschau of Berlin states that Herr Erzberger in 1917, under the régime of Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg, made a peace offer to the Allies through a Dutch journalist. This offer, the paper says, amounted to a plea for peace at any price. Chancellor von Hertling, the paper asserts, now refuses to receive Herr Erzberger.

PARIS SHELLED SUNDAY ONE WOMAN KILLED

PARIS, April 14.—The bombardment of the Paris district by the German long range gun continued today. One woman was killed. The firing began soon after 3 P. M.

Last night the city was subjected to its first nocturnal bombardment since the long rang shelling began, the shelling being resumed late in the night.

The beginning of night bombardments is attributed to the fact that the Germans now know that the French have located exactly the long range gun, so that there is no longer any necessity of refraining from firing after dark lest the flare of the explosion should betray the gun's position.

Reports still fail to show any casualties resulting from the first night's bombardment, while the material damage was insignificant. This negative result is likely to prove a further disappointment to the Germans, as revealing that the nocturnal shelling is no improvement from their point of view on the day bombardments, which they have tried to time, so that the shells would reach the capital at hours when the streets were most crowded. These were the morning hours, when the people were going to work; the midday period, when luncheon was being taken and the early evening when the workers were going home. Notwithstanding these calculations, however, the only shots of the 150 fired which caused any notable casualties were those which, respectively, struck a church on Good Friday, the infant asylum attached to a maternity hospital, and an old men's bowling green. Some others have hit the top stories of houses which were empty, their occupants having gone to work. The Parisians assume that the Germans hoped the night bombardment might find such houses occupied.

The general effect of the long range bombardment seems to have been negative, so far as the Parisian morale is concerned. There is admiration for the accomplishment of the unexpected, but no panic over the results which may be attained.

Philip Gibbs's Story of the Great Battle

listening to the infernal tumult of gunfire south of Bailleul, with knockings and sledgehammer strokes, loud and shocking, above the incessant drumfire of field artillery.

The German shells came howling over into fields and villages beyond Bailleul, bursting with gruff coughs, and there was an evil snarl of shrapnel in the mist. It was the noise of the greatest battle in history, and I listened to it with faith and hope that the enemy would be held back this day by the heroic men out there in those wet fields.

Men were coming to their aid with more gunners and more guns for this northern battle.

They had not wasted any time, though they had traveled hard and were dog-weary and were getting into position in places where I never expected to see guns at work, dumping down their shells, making their wagon lines, unlimbering the guns.

There was no flustered officers and men went about the work quietly, with a word or two. They were white with dust, which filled the lines about their eyes, but the officers gave commands cheerily and the men carried on gamely.

Scenes in a Village Within Range.

Sunday I saw one battery come into action and fire the first shots. They startled some old women tramping by with bundles on their backs, getting away from these villages once so snug under red-tiled roofs. Their doors were open and there was no one at home. Old shells had pierced some of their rafters, and groups of soldiers sat close under their walls hunched up with heads drooping, and in ditches by the roadsides, or stood with their backs to the wall of some old Flemish church, in that way which always tells one that a place is in shell range and likely to be a target for German guns.

Little bodies of troops marched up toward the battle line, led forward by some young officer with grave eyes. They were streaked with dust and carried heavy packs, with their rifles slung, and all about were men of those battalions who had been fighting through all this battle—dirty, tattered men with the thin, gaunt look of soldiers who had been long under fire in the battle line, but still hard, with tightened lips and steel in their eyes.

Some of them slept awhile, stretched out in the fields, fathoms deep in sleep. Some of them drowsed as they marched. In one of their headquarters where I went a staff officer slept on a chair in a small farmhouse room filled with other officers discussing plans of battle. In another headquarters near the battle line, so near that a shell came through the roof of the hut when they were taking their meal, a staff officer was so tired after four days and nights of battle that he could not remember one day from another, though when a message came over the wire to say the enemy was attacking again he became alert at once and went out to give new orders.

Women and Children Very Brave.

The worst tragedy, apart from the ordeal of the fighting men is the plight of the people who lived in places now caught in the flame of war. Out of Bailleul and Merville and Estaires, out of scores of hamlets and farmsteads, they are coming far back in farm carts and gigs and donkey carts, on bicycles and afoot with wheelbarrows and perambulators, on British wagons and in British lorries.

They are enormously brave, these old; old women and these young girls and children. They sit aloft on big hay carts piled high with furniture, while their farm horses stumble on down the long roads and old women nod or sleep like babes on colored mattresses and girls call out good luck to the soldiers. They drive their cattle before them, and yesterday I saw great herds of cows coming back from the country round Bailleul. Small boys with young mothers tramp sturdily on with one hand clasping their mothers' skirts and the other gripping a bundle of clothes, young heroes of France with the courage of their race.

To the last moment some of these people stay in the villages under fire, standing about among the steel-hatted troops until at last they know they must go or die. So now they are moving away from that battle zone, cared for as far as possible by the French and British authorities.

These British soldiers have exceeded all previous records of valor, though God knows they have filled three years and more with acts of courage. I should want hundreds of columns of this paper to tell in full all they have done during these last days. I can only tell a few things baldly, like a catalogue of dull facts, though in them is the soul of our race and the great supreme sacrifice of the human heart.

When the centre was broken at Laventie by the colossal thrust against the Portuguese, some Northumberland Fusiliers, East Yorkshires, and Durham Light Infantry were sent up to hold the line of the Lys and defend Estaires. It was too late to form a strong defensive line, but these men fought against attack after attack by unceasing waves of storm troops.

The Fighting at the Lys.

The Durham Light Infantry held the crossings of the Lys Canal up to Sailly on a front of 10,500 yards until the enemy struck into Bac St. Maur. There was a race for the river. The Durhams got there first, facing the enemy on the other side and raking them with rifle fire. A party of the Durhams held the salient over the river at Lestrem for a long time till it was pounded to mush by German trench mortars. The bank of the Lys could only be weakly held, and there were terrible fights about the bridgeheads, but the enemy crossed between them.

On the morning of April 10 Estaires was filled with shell fire. The enemy rushed the swing bridge and swarmed into the western part of the town, but the Durhams and Northumberland Fusiliers charged down the streets and cleared them of the enemy, making No Man's Land, fifty yards beyond the bridgehead, which they covered with machine guns. Their line was turned by the enemy breaking through higher up close to Armentières and they had to be withdrawn.

A message reached a party of East Yorks, saying: "The enemy is behind us. We are going to fall back," but they refused to retire even then. They fought on until surrounded and overpowered.

The Durhams and their comrades, driven from Merville, withdrew under heavy fire, firing their rifles as they went back, step by step with their faces to the enemy.

One machine gunner kept his weapon in action until all his comrades got away, and the Germans were within seventy yards of him. Then he broke his gun and escaped.

The men in this position had against them two and a half German divisions.

Near Lestrem some of the Durhams had trouble in blowing up a bridge during the enemy's fire, and the men of the French mortar section counterattacked in order to gain time while two companies of the Durhams stayed on the other side of the river for this purpose. When the bridge was blown up the survivors on the other side swam across, with machine-gun bullets whipping the water about them, and rejoined their comrades.

When the enemy attacked Merville in great strength, it was necessary again to blow up bridges, and on one of them ten Germans went up in the explosion after a small party of them had crossed and died fighting with the engineers in charge of this work.

One bridge was left undestroyed; and was seen by a Brigade Major. He is a man with cool courage and slow way of speech. The first news of the enemy's entrance into Merville reached headquarters by a telephone message from him.

"I am told," he said very quietly, "that the boches are almost surrounding this house. Don't quite know whether I can get out."

Then he said: "They are all around the house," and a second later, "They are coming in."

"You had better hop it," said the General.

"Thanks," said the Brigade Major, "I will," and he strolled out the back door while the enemy came in the front.

It was then he saw the unbroken bridge, and searched about for dynamite in a store he happened to know about. He put it in position, but he was attacked by German bombers and had to go more quickly than he is accustomed to move, being a man of unruffled manner.

There was fierce fighting in Merville during the darkness, and the Durhams and other men fell back fighting. Yesterday the enemy attacked again from Merville and were shot down like rabbits by a fierce rifle fire, which even overmastered the machine guns. Here yesterday the enemy was slaughtered and all his attacks were repulsed with bloody losses.

Brilliant Charge by South Africans.

Meanwhile, during this fighting in the Merville sector, there were great battles further north fom Wytschaete Ridge down to Neuve Eglise and Merris, near Bailleul, which are still going on. I have already described how the 9th Division of Scots swept the enemy back from Messines Ridge.

I saw some of their officers yesterday while the fighting was still in progress. They say the charge of the South Africans was one of the finest things ever done, because they were still unrested from the battle of the Somme; but they attacked with tremendous spirit and flung the enemy back. Unfortunately, more masses came against them afterward, and, though the British still hold Wytschaete village, they now swing back from Messines and the southern end of the ridge.

They were the Cheshires who resisted the weight of the German attacks at Neuve Eglise, when the enemy brought up several new divisions against these men, who fought against fearful odds, and afterward the Worcesters and Sherwoods and others made a wonderful counterattack, which drove the enemy out of that place, which was a great menace to the British positions.

Thirteen to fourteen divisions were put in by the enemy between Wytschaete and Bailleul, and for some time it was the supreme courage of the English country regiments that kept back these hordes, fighting day after day.

Sappers put up great fights in holding gaps in the line through which the enemy came with machine guns, trying to widen them for the infantry to follow, as is his method. Several times the South Wales Borderers and their comrades had their flanks exposed by Neuf Berquin and elsewhere, and had to form defensive flanks with small parties who fought to a finish.

Yesterday the enemy in intense fighting made his way into Merris Church, below Bailleul, but was driven back with most severe losses. It was a day of fierce battling on this part of the front and southward beyond Merville, but along the whole front the enemy was checked.

His losses were tragic for him, and our men sustained his abominable assaults in strength with a courage which made the day desperate for the German troops and vain for their high command.

DIARY SHOWS GERMAN PLAN TO SHIFT ATTACK

When Checked at One Point, to Be Broken Off and Transferred to Another Sector.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS ON THE BRITISH FRONT, April 13.—A diary was found on the body of a German officer of the 26th Division killed south of Hebuterne on April 6. It reveals the high hopes of the German army before the great offensive of March 21, their enormous concentration of troops and guns, and their ambitious plans of driving a wedge between the French and British armies by hurling all their weight against the British front and advancing "in a westerly direction to the ports of Boulogne, Abbéville, &c."

The enemy's tactics of breaking off attacks where they are checked and moving at once to another section where the chance of success may be greater are noted by the German diarist. This plan is exactly what has been adopted by the German high command since March 21.

Following are extracts from the diary:

"March 18—At last we are getting further information about the operations on this front. In three armies huge masses of troops are marching forward. In the salient south of Arras attacks will be launched at three different points, the code names for which will be Michael 1, 2, and 3. Zero Day is to be called Michael Day. This name is also the symbol for the German Michael's day of revenge.

Plan to Isolate French.

"The general line of advance is in a westerly direction to the ports of Boulogne, Abbéville, &c., in order to separate the British from the French. If France is left to herself she will come to terms quickly, therefore the chief blows are to be directed against the British. The preparations have been so thoughtfully planned that failure is almost an impossibility. In spite of all this, if it should happen that the attack is held up at one point it will be immediately broken off there and troops moved to another sector. To the north of Group I Michael, is Group Mars.

"We have a colossal amount of artillery at our disposal. For instance, in our own division, of which only two regiments will be in line, we have sixty-eight batteries and several hundred trench mortars of various calibres. Gas is to be freely used, an immeasurable quantity of material is at hand for bridging trenches and shell holes to enable transport and artillery of the attacking infantry to follow up the enemy. Large formations follow behind to deal with the booty, wounded, and prisoners.

"We continue to march smoothly, all precautions being taken with regard to cover, as hostile aircraft are about everywhere. One hears and sees anti-aircraft fire and machine gun fire with tracer bullets. The English aviators continually drop star shells to assist them in searching for the roads. Everything passes on smoothly, and it is strange to think of all the masses of troops which are marching westward on all the various roads over a wide front tonight. 'Germany is on the march.'

"March 20—Our artillery is four times as great as the enemy's. Tanks are provided to act as tractors for the heavy guns. The reserve of officers and noncommissioned officers is to be detached from the infantry before it goes into action. Up to the present the enemy appears to have noticed nothing of our movement.

"March 21—Artillery barrage at 6 A. M. in the direction of the Michael sector. In the afternoon we went to a wireless station, where at last we got first news from the front. The attack was a complete success and the enemy was entirely taken by surprise. Bullecourt, Croisilles, and St. Leger are in our hands. The enemy is also giving way in our sector. Many artillery regiments have gone up, including Austrians. The spirits of our troops are high, especially as we hear that the affair at Verdun has also succeeded. Very interesting to watch the aerial activity. As Michael's attack succeeded, it seems hardly probable that the further attack planned by Mars, to which we belong, will take place.

Little to Show for Big Losses.

"March 30—We are still hopeful of becoming attached to one or more successful attacking groups further south. We have had fairly heavy casualties and have very little success to show for them, as the opposition here is too well organized for us.

"April 1—We are to take part in the next big attack, which will take place shortly, and are to cover the right flank of a group which has to force passages over the Ancre. Our group will attack from the sector of the Hebuterne sugar factory, two kilometers south of Hebuterne, toward Colincamps. Meanwhile we remain here in support. Enormous amount of traffic on the Cambrai-Bapaume road, up to which point the railway will also be running tomorrow.

"April 4—At 2 A. M. I left with the first machine gun company. It was pitch dark, raining, and there were numberless holes and old trenches everywhere. We ran into a burst of fire, and unfortunately one shell dropped between the second and third sections. There were a few killed and wounded. We arrived up in the front line at 7 A. M. The battalion had mistaken the way at night and was not in its correct position. It is now too light, and we cannot alter our positions. It is an awful mixup. During the day we remain in an old English dugout. In the evening we are to take up our correct positions, which will be a very difficult matter, as troops of five or six different battalions are all mixed up together."

Here the diary ends.

hard grip will be justified in the event.

Where, then, does the offensive stand? Its general objective is exactly described in Field Marshal Haig's address to his troops: "To separate us from the French, seize the Channel ports, and destroy the British Army."

The first phase or act of the offensive, launched with unprecedented masses of troops, completely failed to reach its aim, and entailed losses that no lesser success could warrant. Begun on March 21, with three armies—those of von Below, von der Marwitz and von Hutier—counting nearly fifty divisions, about forty more had to be brought in before the first week was out.

By that time the French armies had been pushed northwestward with admirable rapidity and characteristically splendid spirit, and by the last day of the month the host of the Prussian Crown Prince, including the Guard and others of the best German units had been fought to a standstill from Noyon and Lassigny to the Avre and the Somme.

Several hard combats in the last fortnight, the latest ending in the French recovering the village of Hangard on Friday and their useful advance yesterday near Orvillers, do but confirm this result. That the German losses are fully commensurate with the ambition of their aims and the prodigal method pursued is shown by another fact unprecedented in the history of war.

At the end of three weeks of the offensive about 1,500,000 men have been cast into the battle, and seventy-five divisions have become so dislocated as to have to be withdrawn for reorganization. It is therefore probable that the total German casualties up to date approach 500,000.

Second Phase Opened March 28.

The second phase may be regarded as having opened March 28 with the entry of General von Below's right wing into action east of Arras, and as culminating with the battle of Armentières, involving the army of General von Quest and the left wing of General von Arnim's army of Ypres, while a subsidiary operation by General von Boehm's army threatened the French between the Oise and St. Gobain Forest.

This northern battle began in a much smaller way than the original offensive, with about twenty divisions on a twenty-mile front, and it may have been its initial success that determined its prompt extension.

While it may fairly be said to have constituted a confession of failure in the earlier adventure, its development not only creates a new danger, but strengthens the German position athwart the Somme. The situation, therefore, must be looked at straightforwardly and spoken of without mincing words. Sir Douglas Haig sets the example in that regard. We want plain facts without either optimistic or pessimistic glasses.

From the village of Hangard to Abbéville is about forty miles; from Merville to Calais is the same distance; to Boulogne a little more; from the Ypres front to Dunkirk is about thirty miles; to Nieuport a little less. These are the limits of the allied power of manoeuvre for the defense of the Channel.

Bishop of Cork Warns Against Irish Uprising

CORK, April 14.—In the city churches today a letter from the Catholic Bishop of Cork was read, advising the young men of Ireland to avoid playing into the hands of their enemies by joining a formal military rising, which the Bishop said would be quickly crushed. The letter said the Bishop thought that at the coming conferences between the Nationalist and the Sinn Fein leaders a program would be evolved. The Bishop, therefore, advised the people to defer action pending the decision of the conferees.

WHY THEY INVADE RUSSIA.

Germans Are Pursuing "Bands," Kuehlmann Tells Soviet Minister.

LONDON, April 15.—Dr. von Kühlmann, the German Foreign Secretary, according to a German wireless dispatch received here, has replied to the Russian protest against the German invasion of Russia by asserting that the Germans and Ukrainians are attempting to break up "bands" and are not attacking Russia. The message to the Russian Foreign Minister says:

"Owing to the resistance and counterattacks by bands which are causing disturbance in the Ukraine and which do not make any distinction between the Ukraine and Russian territory, it is impossible in operations against them to keep strictly to the frontiers which were defined as Ukrainian districts. The operations against these bands cannot possibly be limited to the frontiers so long as the Russian Government does nothing to disarm the offenders.

"A change in this unpleasant state of things is looked for only when peace is signed between the Ukrainian Republic and the Government of the People's Commissaries, and organized and unorganized hands alike shall be compelled to cease hostilities."

Better business credit means a stronger nation financially

Anything that helps to make our national resources more fully available now demands careful consideration. The more general use of the trade acceptance, based on the sale of goods, will tend to strengthen our national financial position.

The Federal Reserve Board says that the substitution of discountable two-name paper for the notes now forming the bulk of our business obligations will improve the commercial paper of the country.

While the trade acceptance cannot make a poor credit good, it is preferable to the ordinary commercial paper because it is better protected and more readily salable, bearing two indorsements instead of one.

Ask us for further information about trade acceptances. All business men should know about them.

ARMENIAN COUNCIL PROTESTS TO BERLIN

Asks That Measures Be Taken to End Excesses of the Turkish Troops.

GERMANY IS RESPONSIBLE

Her Insistence at Peace Conference Resulted in Withdrawal of Russians, It Is Pointed Out.

LONDON, April 14.—Russia has followed her protest in Germany against the Turkish operations in the Caucasus, which have resulted in wholesale murders of the Armenian population, by forwarding a similar protest by the Armenian National Council, addressed to the German Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the President of the Reichstag. This protest, received from the Russian wireless system and given out by the British Admiralty through the Wireless Press, reads:

"The Armenian National Council, as the supreme body for the expression of the will of the Armenian people, is addressing you in connection with the tragic state of things in Armenia. Armenia is flooded with blood and, only recently saved from centuries of slavery, is again condemned to fresh sufferings. Following upon the withdrawal of the Russian troops, Turkish troops have already invaded the undefended country and are not only killing every Turkish Armenian, but also every Russian in Armenia.

"In spite of the terms of the peace treaty, which recognizes the right of self-determination for these Caucasian regions, the Turkish Army is advancing toward Kars and Ardahan, destroying the country and killing the Christian population. The responsibility for the future destiny of the Armenians lies entirely with Germany, because it was Germany's insistance that resulted in the withdrawal of the Russian troops from the Armenian regions, and at the moment it rests with Germany to prevent the habitual excesses of the Turkish troops, increased by revengefulness and anger.

"It is hard to believe that a civilized State like Germany, which has the means for preventing the excesses of her ally, will permit the Brest-Litovsk treaty to be used by the German people, who have been involved in war against their own will, as a means for the creation of incalculable sufferings.

"The National Council firmly believes that you will undertake the necessary measures, which depend solely upon you, to influence the Turkish authorities with a view to saving the Armenian people from fresh horrors."

MURDER OF MAR SHIMUN.

Syrian Catholicos First Head of a Nationality to Perish in the War.

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief last night gave out the following concerning Mar Shimun, head of the Assyrian Church, who was killed recently, according to a cablegram received by the State Department at Washington on Saturday.

Mar Shimun is the first political head of a nationality who has paid the supreme sacrifice of this war. To his people he was both King Albert and Cardinal Mercier. In 1906, when a boy of 18, Mar Shimun was selected to become Catholicos or Patriarch, to succeed his uncle, Ruwel Reuben, who was on the point of death. He was consecrated Catholicos on April 12 of that year. He was educated by native teachers and by members of the mission established by Archbishop Benson of Canterbury at the Patriarchal seat, Qudshanis, (Kochannes,) in Kurdistan.

His older sister, Surma, who ranked next to him in influence over his people, also was educated at the mission and later became a recognized authority on canon law and Church history.

Attacked by the Turks in June, 1913, Mar Shimun and his 125,000 Assyrian highlanders defended the narrow valley of their mountain home, which might be termed a Switzerland in Asia. After Turkish mountain guns had battered down ancient castles and churches, the Assyrians were forced to abandon their valley and retreat to mountain fastnesses.

When their supplies ran out, Mar Shimun, with a handful of warriors, risked grave perils to reach the Russian lines at Salmas, Persia, but the Russians, weakened by the loss of Warsaw, could give no assistance. Then Mar Shimun, returning to his people, was forced to lead them down to the plateaus of Northwestern Persia, where they scattered over the plains of Salmas and Urumiah. There 15 per cent. of them died from cold and hunger.

As 120th Catholicos of the east he maintained the ancient traditions and his people almost worshipped him.

FINNISH REVOLUTION IN ITS LAST THROES

Red Guard Communications Cut, Bjoerneborg Taken, German Warships at Helsingfors.

STOCKHOLM, April 14.—The closing scenes of the Finnish revolution may soon be enacted, according to the indications in the latest reports from that strife-ridden area. A portion of the German fleet is now lying in Helsingfors Harbor and German troops which have been landed have taken Hyvinge, which is the railway junction south from Riikidaaki. This severs the communications of the Red Guard in Helsingfors with Viborg. The Germans are also closing in on Helsingfors from other quarters and are now within twelve miles of the city at one point.

The Svenska Dagbladet's Vasa correspondent reports that important operations have been begun on the Viborg front, where General Mannerheim, the White Guard leader, has assembled strong forces. A vigorous campaign is being conducted against the Reds on the entire Karelen front. Bjoerneborg also has been taken by the White Guards, leaving the Red Guards only one important place on the West coast, namely Abo.

The Red Guard is reported here to be conducting a reign of terror in Abo, marked by all the grimness characterizing the earlier days of the revolution in other cities under their control. A traveler, who has reached Vasa from Abo, reports that the Reds have dynamited the State Bank in the latter place and that the homes of the bourgeois are being plundered. Two hundred and fifty persons, he asserts, are known to have been murdered.

TURIN GREETS LA GUARDIA.

Congressman's Quotations from Wilson Cause a Demonstration.

TURIN, April 14.—Italian, British, French and Belgian Societies held a meeting here today in order that Captain Fiorello H. La Guardia, Congressman from a New York City district and a member of the American Flying Corps, might address the people of Turin on his way to the front.

Captain La Guardia's address was based on President Wilson's speech at Baltimore on April 7, and his frequent direct quotations from the speech created a profound impression. The meeting closed with a warm demonstration in favor of the United States.

calls sent out by hundreds of American vessels in the Atlantic, including vessels that have been on the lookout for the missing collier.

The Navy Department issued the following statement:

"The U. S. S. Cyclops, navy collier of 19,000 tons displacement, loaded with a cargo of manganese, and with a personnel on board of 15 officers and 221 men of the crew and 57 passengers, is overdue at an Atlantic port since March 13. She last reported at one of the West Indian islands on March 4, and since her departure from that port no trace of her nor any information concerning her has been obtained. Radio calls to the Cyclops from all possible points have been made and vessels sent to search for her along her probable route and areas in which she might be, with no success.

"No well-founded reason can be found to explain the Cyclops being overdue, as no radio communication with or trace of her has been had since leaving the West Indian port. The weather in the area in which the vessel must have passed has not been bad, and could hardly have given the Cyclops trouble. While a raider or submarine could be responsible for her loss, there have been no reports that would indicate the presence of either in the locality in which the Cyclops was.

"It was known that one of the two engines of the Cyclops was injured, and that she was proceeding at a reduced speed, with one engine compounded. This fact would have no effect on her ability to communicate by radio, for even if her main engines were totally disabled the ship would still be capable of using her radio plant.

"The search for the Cyclops still continues, but the Navy Department feels extremely anxious as to her safety."

Commanded by Reserve Officer.

The Cyclops was commanded by Lieut. Commander G. W. Worley of Norfolk, an officer in the United States Naval Reserve, and all the other officers attached to the vessel were Naval Reserves. The only officer of the regular navy in her personnel was Burt J. Asper, an Assistant Surgeon. Frank C. Nigg, a junior grade Lieutenant of the regular navy, was on board as a passenger.

The enlisted men of the navy and Marine Corps who were passengers on the Cyclops were "casuals" from naval vessels being brought home.

The Cyclops was one of the largest fuel ships afloat. The vessel was authorized by Congress in 1908, and was similar to the colliers Hector, Jupiter, Mars, and Vulcan. The Cyclops was launched on May 7, 1910, and was commissioned on Nov. 7 of that year. Her dimensions were, length 542 feet, breadth 65 feet, 36 feet 9 inches depth of hold, and her net tonnage was 7,065 tons. The mean draught of the vessel was 27 feet 8 inches, her displacement 19,360 tons, and her deadweight capacity 12,900 tons. On trial the collier made 14.61 knots, loaded. The vessel cost $923,000.

MANY BALTIMORE MEN ON LIST

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 14.—Nine of the fifteen Baltimoreans aboard the missing collier Cyclops were on the Navy's honor roll, having enlisted in April, 1917, when the drive for 800 volunteers was inaugurated in Maryland. The remaining five were either firemen or men with ratings from previous enlistments, with the exception of Ensign Schonnof, who was the only commissioned officer from Baltimore aboard. He was thirty years old and was born in Germany. He came to this country when a youth and soon after enlisted in the navy as seaman and eventually attained the rank of ensign. His wife lives here.

Lawrence Merkel, seaman, was 21. His father, Samuel Merkel, received a letter from him at a West Indian port some time ago.

William Robert Wolf, 10 years old, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wolf.

George Jones Amiger was a native of Calvert County, where the Amiger family have lived for many generations. Last year he enlisted.

Dr. Burt J. Asper, whose address is given as Chambersburg, Penn., joined the navy when the United States entered the war. Prior to that he had served on the staff at the Shepherd and Enoch Pratt Sanitarium, and later at the Springfield Sanitarium here. Only last Fall he married Miss Lee Chrietoy, a Baltimore girl, who is now living in New York.

Special to The New York Times.

BOUND BROOK, N. J., April 14.—Charles Hodge, a motorman for the Public Service Corporation here, received a telegram from the Navy Department today announcing that his son, Lieutenant Clarence R. Hodge, was one of the officers missing with the naval collier Cyclops. Letters from Lieutenant Hodge had been received by relatives only a few days ago.

Lieutenant Hodge was 25 years old and had been in the United States Navy for about seven years. He enlisted when he was about 18 years old, and became a chief petty officer before the expiration of his first enlistment. He left the navy about 1915, but re-enlisted shortly before the United States entered the war. He took the examination for a commission, and after a few months as an Ensign he was promoted to Lieutenant. His younger brother, Raymond, is a chief petty officer in the navy.

CONSUL A VOLUNTEER.

Gottschalk Was Coming Home to Offer His Services to Army.

Alfred L. Moreau Gottschalk, American Consul General at Rio de Janeiro, a passenger aboard the naval collier Cyclops, was returning home to offer his services in the army. Mr. Gottschalk was born in New York forty-five years ago, and entered the consular service in 1902. During the Spanish-American war he went to Porto Rico as a newspaper correspondent, and after the war he became a sugar planter in Santo Domingo and Haiti.

In 1914, after consular service in Nicaragua, Peru, Mexico and Africa, Mr. Gottschalk was detailed to assist at the American Consulate at London on work in connection with the European War. He was appointed to the Brazilian post in November of the same year.

Special to The New York Times.

PHOENIX, Ariz., April 14. — Two Phoenix men are reported missing with the collier Cyclops. These are Chief Electrician Francis Edwin Cotten and Ensign R. T. Smith. Of Ensign Smith no information was obtainable tonight, although careful inquiry was made. Cotten was the son of Mrs. Jack Rhinehart of this city. Her son enlisted in the navy about nine years ago and for a time was stationed at Mare Island. His wife and one child are living near San Francisco. He was chief wireless operator aboard the Cyclops.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT HURON, Mich., April 14.—Mrs. Harvey F. Forbes has received a telegram from the Navy Department that the Cyclops, on which her husband, Lieutenant Forbes was serving, has been missing since March 4, and was last reported from the West Indies. Mrs. Forbes resides in Port Huron. She has three children. Lieutenant Forbes formerly sailed on the Great Lakes and joined the navy at Detroit in December, 1917.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, Vt., April 14.—C. G. Page, assistant paymaster in the navy, who is reported missing with the Cyclops, is a grandson of Senator C. S. Page of Hyde Park. He was born in 1894 and was in the Class of 1917 at the University of Vermont. His mother is a widow.

Seaman Green's Family Notified.

George J. Green, a motorman, of 2,374 Cornella Street, Glendale, Queens, received a telegram from the Navy Department yesterday, saying that his son, Elmer J. Green, a warrant officer in the navy, was a member of the crew of the collier Cyclops. The family had not heard from him for several months, and they did not know that he was on the collier. He was 24 years old, and had been in the navy for six years.

HOPES OF VICTORY WANE IN GERMANY

Marked Change from General Expectation of Success at Outset of Drive.

BAN ON DEMOCRACY NOW

Joseph Denz, Refugee Inventor, Crosses Border with Account of Teuton Conditions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, April 14.—"If you talk about democracy in Germany today, they put you in jail. Public opinion in Germany is beginning to change as a result of the offensive. While at the beginning every one believed in success, the feeling is now divided. Only officials hold the victory theory, while the masses are skeptical."

Joseph Denz of Phtiadelphia, the American inventor of a hydraulic press, who before the war had big business interests in Lyons, France, and has just escaped from Germany, made this statement today.

Born of Swiss parents in Germany 46 years ago, Denz became a naturalized American. After perfecting his inventions in France, he registered twenty-six patents at the American Consulate in Geneva in 1912. He was in Switzerland at the outbreak of the war. Denz was induced to go to Germany, where he received a promise of assistance with compressed air experiments, but instead he was arrested and forced into the Germany Army, where he served two years, while the German authorities refused permission for him to communicate with Gerard.

Late in 1916 he was released upon Minister Van Dyke's assistance and boarded a Dutch steamer for America, but because of his service in the German Army he was interned on the Isle of Man until Feb. 23 of this year, when he was sent back to Germany with repatriated Germans. For nearly two months he had been working his way through the Rhine Valley to the Swiss border by forging a passport, which he made after carving the design and stamps in hard wood and thus he escaped into Switzerland.

He claims and the Consular records are expected to show that he has $5,000,000 due from patents used by the Allies during the war.

Denz offered his services to the American forces in France, declaring that "the only means left to end the war, and for America and the Allies to win, is to fight." The German people, he says, are thoroughly dissatisfied with their Government, but are powerless because any one who speaks publicly against the authorities is immediately jailed. If the French were to come through Southern Germany he believes, they would be well received. The Germans are beginning to fear America now. They no longer believe the press lies about it.

Denz, from the time he left England until he arrived in Switzerland, had neither meat nor coffee. En route through Bavaria his good clothing was taken away and he received wooden shoes and rags.

While the authorities here are often skeptical regarding such cases, investigation shows that Denz is whole-heartedly American. He has been pushed from pillar to post as an unfortunate citizen everywhere, being forbidden to communicate with American officials. Free at last, he wants to fight the Germans, whom he blames for his misfortunes.

Honduras Plant Dynamited.

SAN SALVADOR, April 13.—Iron pipes furnishing water for electric plants at San Juan, Honduras, have been blown up with dynamite. The plants furnished 7,000 horse power a day. The management has offered a large reward for the discovery of the perpetrators.

CABINET DRAFTING A HOME RULE BILL

Plan Said to Include a Veto Committee of Ulsterites Within the Parliament

TO RESTRICT LEGISLATION

Senate of 64 Members and a House of 200, with 80 Guaranteed to the Ulster Counties.

LONDON, April 15.—A committee of the British Cabinet is now drafting an Irish Home Rule bill, the Parliamentary correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says. An Irish Parliament and executive will be established, with full powers over the internal legislation and administration, and over direct taxation. Representation in the Imperial Parliament will be retained in the form of a delegation of forty-two Irish members.

An Irish Senate of sixty-four members, he adds, will be constituted by allotting representation to different interests. The Irish House of Commons will consist of 200 members, 80 guaranteed to be Unionists chosen in the South by nomination, and in Ulster by an additional direct election.

Supreme authority of the Imperial Parliament will be recognized by the reservation of powers relating to the Crown, to foreign relations, to the army and navy, and to minor services and interests. Control of the police and Post Office will be retained for the period of the war. The completion of land purchases will be expedited.

For the period of the war and two years afterward the control of customs and excise will be reserved. As soon as possible after the establishment of an Irish parliament, a joint exchequer board will be set up to determine the true revenue of Ireland. On the conclusion of peace a royal commission will be appointed to examine impartially and thoroughly the financial relations of Great Britain and Ireland, to report what contribution Ireland ought to make to imperial expenditures and to submit proposals as to the best means of adjusting the economic and fiscal relations of the two countries.

Provision, the correspondent continues, probably will be made for the appointment of an Ulster committee within the Irish Parliament with power to modify, or even exclude, the application from Ulster of measures of legislation or administration which may not be deemed consonant with the interests of the province.

At the week-end a serious state of affairs developed affecting the position of the Lloyd George Government, according to the Parliamentary correspondent of The Daily News. The Labor Party, he said, is opposed to Irish conscription, and the Labor Ministers are considering whether they can support the Government.

George Nicoll Barnes, who is a member of the War Cabinet, is said to be in complete disagreement with the Government on the Irish conscription policy.

If the Government's proposals are pressed forward in the way indicated by Premier Lloyd George and Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law, the correspondent adds, it is probable the labor executive will call on the Labor Ministers to withdraw from the Government. Some Liberal members are believed to be very adverse to Irish conscription.

The situation, it is added, will have to be composed today or tomorrow, or the Government will be in grave difficulties.

ITALIAN GUNS BUSY.

Rival Batteries in Concentrated Action Along Entire Front.

ROME, April 14.—Army Headquarters today issued the following statement:

The activity of the hostile artillery was confined to desultory, intermittent concentrations of fire along the entire front. We carried out effective concentrations against enemy batteries on the Asiago Plateau and along the Piave.

Enemy patrols were dispersed by burst of rifle and machine gun fire in the Lagarina Valley or engaged and repulsed by detachments of our Alpini in the Asiago Basin.

GIVES TO T. R. BULLET THAT FELLED ARCHIE

Dr. Mason, Here from Front, Tells Colonel of His Son's Bravery in Battle.

SAVED OTHERS UNDER FIRE

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt entertained at dinner yesterday Dr. O. H. L. Mason, Foreign Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who was recalled from foreign soil to campaign in New York State for the Third Liberty Loan. The home of the former President was thrown wide open to the man who fought under Roosevelt in the Spanish-American war and who now brought a personal message from Captain Archie Roosevelt, who was severely wounded in "No Man's Land" after performing a series of heroic deeds while under fire from the Germans. That was not all. Dr. Mason tenderly drew from his inner coat a small bag which Captain Roosevelt asked him to give to his father. It contained the bullet that shattered the bone in Captain Roosevelt's left arm.

Colonel Roosevelt was nearly overcome with the details of the injury to his son, but his face brightened as Dr. Mason told him that Archie had distinguished himself by pulling from a place under full fire three of his comrades.

"That is fully," was the Colonel's remark. "Did he have anything else to say?" asked Mr. Roosevelt.

"He told me to tell you and his wife that his wounds were healing as well as could be expected and that he would be at the front soon again," said Dr. Mason. "Captain Roosevelt is injured probably a great deal more seriously than he knows, and I am afraid it will be some time before he gets into action again."

"Tell me how Archie was wounded," was the next question asked of Dr. Mason.

"Captain Roosevelt received orders to charge with a detachment of men," said Dr. Mason. "He went forward and was met by a scouting party of Germans. By the time the fire was in the open Roosevelt and his men were between the Germans and the American troops. Roosevelt went down with a bullet in his left arm and a shattered left knee. He lay on the blood-stained ground for many hours until Red Cross nurses rescued him.

"He was taken to an American hospital and insisted upon being with the other wounded men of his command. This request was granted, and he is now with his comrades. He is more seriously wounded than he thinks. At the time Captain Roosevelt was shot I was three miles from the scene of action. I heard of the cross fire and went to the hospital. He asked me to get word to his family that all was well, saying: 'It is no use worrying the folks at home.'

"During one of my visits to the hospital to see the American boys I was told that on that afternoon French officials were going to give Captain Roosevelt the Croix de Guerre. I waited and soon, while he was stretched out, the medal for valor was given to him. The lad was delighted, but never talked of his work, just praising the valor of his comrades. He is more than anxious to get back to the front, and it is with difficulty that the physicians can keep him in bed."

Dr. Mason, after talking at length with the Colonel and Mrs. Leslie Roosevelt in Boston on the long distance telephone and told her of the work performed by her husband and of his general condition.

Dr. Mason, who has three sons in France as soldiers, is himself a soldier, being a veteran of the Spanish-American war, in which he held the rank of Major. It was with the greatest of difficulty that the Y. M. C. A. was persuaded by Government officials to allow Dr. Mason to come back to lecture on the Third Liberty Loan. At the time that the Y. M. C. A. was asked for Dr. Mason's services the officials declared that he was "somewhere in France," it was a week before a cable reached him. He will return to France as soon as the campaign is over.

"I want to say to the American mothers and fathers that their sons were never in better physical condition than they are at the present time in France," said Dr. Mason yesterday. "There is not a place in any part of the civilized world where disease is less rampant. The boys are impatient to get into action. I was with them when it was announced that they were about to proceed to the front line trenches. I never witnessed a more patriotic sight than when they sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and threw their hats in the air with enthusiasm.

"I have been in the trenches over night, have been where all the big battles have been fought, was present at the battle of the Somme, witnessed the fight at Verdun and I want to say that Germany cannot win. Verdun will never fall in a thousand years, and the front line now being hard pressed may bend but will never break. Where it bends the Americans will fill the gap, and some day the Germans will wake up and find themselves in their own graveyards.

"This I want to impress upon the minds of Americans. The situation is alarming, but not critical. One of the best ways to relieve the tension is to back up the allied troopers by purchasing Liberty Loan bonds. It may seem strange, but nevertheless it is a fact, that the inhabitants of Great Britain and France are as much keyed up over this big financial drive as we are. America must put the finishing touches to this great war, and she must have money with which to do it."

WARNING BY CARRANZA.

Don't Hurt Foreigners' Feelings, He Suggests to Mexican Press.

MEXICO CITY, April 14.—President Carranza has suggested to the Mexican press through the Foreign Minister, General Candido Aguilar, that the feelings of the foreign diplomatic representatives and the subjects of friendly nations should not be hurt or attacked. He adds that international conditions are delicate and that the wounding of the susceptibilities of foreign Governments by certain publications would make difficult the maintenance of neutrality by Mexico.

President Carranza's statement is made in the way of an appeal and not a measure tending to restrict the freedom of the press in any way.

HOLLAND JUBILANT OVER OFFER OF GRAIN

News That America Will Send It Regarded as "Almost Too Good to Be True."

THE HAGUE, Saturday, April 13.—The announcement of the American War Trade Board's offer to send immediately two shiploads of American grain to Holland and to facilitate the sending of a third shipload from Argentina occasioned considerable popular relief here through the prospect that the distress owing to the shortage of food supplies would be alleviated. The condition that three equivalent vessels must leave Dutch ports simultaneously, which was not mentioned in the press message carrying the announcement, has not yet reached the newspapers, however, save by way of rumor.

American Minister Garrett yesterday communicated the American Government's offer to the Foreign Office, where it is under careful consideration, but no immediate decision will be taken pending the receipt of adequate assurances regarding the safety in the war zone of the outgoing and incoming vessels.

The prospect of receiving grain supplies and the hope that some system will be devised whereby such supplies can be maintained to tide the nation over the Summer and early Fall are popularly described as "almost too good to be true." In the meantime the general attitude is that it would be better to refrain from rejoicing until the grain is actually here, and until then, as the Minister of Agriculture said in the First Chamber yesterday, there can be no question about raising the bread ration.

2,500 RED CROSS WORKERS IN FRANCE

GREAT AID TO REFUGEES

Physicians Care for More Than 40,000 Children Returning to France by One Route.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, March 14.—In view of the call which the American Red Cross intends to send out shortly for a further subscription fund of $100,000,000, it might be well to give a few facts as to what has already been accomplished in France by the organization.

Officers and men in Red Cross uniform are seen driving automobiles and camions in all sections on the American front, and its ambulances are attached to French hospitals as well as American base hospitals, which contain from 2,000 to 3,000 patients.

There has been during the last few months some criticism in Paris that Red Cross funds were being spent extravagantly by wealthy American women who went around to the big department stores ordering goods valued at thousands of francs, while the warehouses belonging to the association were packed with goods.

Officials of the Red Cross, when asked about the criticisms, replied that the organization had been equipped to meet the demand of the American Army, and the stores of all kinds held in warehouses were reserves or used in emergency. This had already proved to be most valuable for the army, and when shipping had been delayed the Red Cross supplied the troops with medical stores, provisions, beds, &c., when they were badly needed. Camions are kept at the depots ready to start for the front at a few minutes' notice.

Has 2,500 Workers.

"The work of the American Red Cross in France, which is supported by more than 22,400,000 Americans who have contributed a voluntary fund exceeding to date 240,000,000 francs, is carried on by a staff of nearly 2,500 workers, whose labors extend to practically every department of the French Republic.

"For the distribution of supplies to give aid and comfort to the soldiers of the allied nations and their families, to help suffering noncombatants and refugees, and to assist in remaking homes places in the war-devastated areas, twenty-nine warehouses are required. They handle an average of 15,000 tons of supplies per month through a service of 500 ambulances, autonobiles, and camions.

"The American Red Cross operates twenty hospitals of the first class, assists in the operation of five others, and conducts seventy-six dispensaries in behalf of the civil population of France. For those stricken with tuberculosis, it cooperates in the conduct of three sanitariums and aids in the provision of comfort equipment of tuberculosis barracks in and about Paris, which has brought about an increase of 25 per cent. in attendance at these barracks since September, 1917.

"Its supply service includes two factories for the manufacture of hospital splints and artificial limbs in accordance with the latest designs approved by surgical science, and two surgical dressing establishments. One of these alone has a capacity of 180,710 dressings per week. These dressings are forwarded to 1,305 French and sixteen American hospitals. But the general hospital supply service provides equipment for nearly 4,000 hospitals in France, and, in addition, has fitted a hospital train with the most modern apparatus for the use of the French Army.

Relief in Devastated Areas.

"In order to insure the immediate distribution of goods in the devastated regions of France six warehouses are used, and already about 40,000 articles have been shipped to these zones to repair the damage brought about by air raids.

"In five villages selected for intensive reconstruction, work is well under way upon houses damaged by shell-fire or bombs, and barns and other outbuildings have been made usable. A grant of 50,000 francs has been made to set out 40,000 fruit-bearing trees in the destroyed orchards of the north. Also a model farm of 500 acres has been established to teach modern American methods of agriculture to maimed French soldiers.

"Refugees are receiving grants of goods either directly from the American Red Cross or through 78 organizations and 28 local French officials, and in all 16,372 separate articles of clothing, 30,150 meters of cloth, and 237 layettes for needy babies, with a great number of sewing machines and quantities of dressmaking supplies, foodstuffs, and medicines, have been distributed.

"At the front the Red Cross maintains twelve canteens, which have served more than 1,000,000 French soldiers on their way up to the trenches or as they passed on going back to the rear on leave. In Paris and its environs thirteen canteens provide hot food for great bands of permissionaries entering or leaving the city. The American Red Cross has served approximately 3,000,000 soldiers per month at its various stations since it entered the field of canteen work.

"A fund of 3,650,000 francs has been placed in the hands of General Pétain, Commander in Chief of the French Army, for distribution among sick and disabled French soldiers and their needy families, as he may see fit.

"At Marseilles the American Red Cross is establishing hospitals and nurseries in furtherance of its work for the welfare of French children, with a special reference to the children of mothers engaged in any of the countless ramifications of war work.

"In its work among the repatriated children who return in the large convoys of French families released from the occupied region of the North and returning to France through the gateway of Evian-les-Bains on Lake Geneva, the American Red Cross physicians have examined more than 40,000 children and close upon 1,000 have been treated in the hospital for acute and contagious diseases. Between Feb. 4 and 23, 401 children were cared for and 10,116 were examined. The number receiving dispensary aid exceeds 18,000. Those in need of convalescent care and those of the repatriates determined to be tuberculous were sent to the Red Cross hospital near Lyons.

"More than fifty American Red Cross representatives, covering forty-four departments of the republic, meet the thousands of homeless old men and women and children who have been leaving Evian every week to find new homes for themselves in the departments to which they have been assigned by the Government. The representatives aid them in re-establishing their homes by providing them with fuel, furniture, clothing, and food.

"As the refugee problem has always been a serious one in France, the American Red Cross has lent its efforts to aid in its solution. In Paris twenty-six unfinished apartment buildings capable of housing more than 700 families—3,850 persons—have been turned over to refugee and housing organizations for completion, the Red Cross providing furnishings as they have been needed, and, in some instances, making rent advances to cover the costs of construction."

Hold Soldier for Using "Knuckles."

When Policeman Richard Fitzpatrick charged that one of three prisoners wearing the army uniform had used "brass knuckles" on him, Magistrate Steers in Flatbush Court yesterday held the soldier in $1,000 bail for examination today. He gave his name as Robert Stephens, and said he was a member of a Georgia regiment at Camp Mills. The others were fined $1 each by the Magistrate.

AMERICANS REPULSE GERMANS; KILL 64

ing he was supposed to be where he was solely for medical relief purposes.

Fierce Attack on Saturday.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, April 13, (Associated Press.)—After another night of terrific artillery fire and a bombardment with gas shells, the Germans today continued their efforts to drive through to the third line of the American positions near Apremont Forest, northwest of Toul. They made two attacks, both of which failed. The enemy's casualties in the four days' fighting are estimated at between 500 and 600. Of this number more than 100 were killed.

Although the enemy wasted fully half of his especially trained shock troop battalion of 800 men, he was unable to penetrate the American lines, which remained unchanged.

Of the thirty-six prisoners taken by American troops in the fighting on Friday northwest of Toul, during which two German attacks in force were repulsed with heavy casualties to the enemy, twelve have since died of their wounds. The American troops also captured two German machine guns, besides a quantity of small arms, grenades and other war material.

The prisoners taken belonged to the 25th and 65th Landwehr units, the 16th Pioneers, and the Uhlans. They said they had had no food for two days, as the American artillery had prevented their rations from being brought up to their position. The captive Germans quickly devoured the food given them by our men.

Hand-to-Hand Fighting.

The enemy front lines had been destroyed by shellfire, and during Friday's attack the Americans temporarily abandoned their own front line, allowed the Germans to enter it, and then forced them to engage in hand-to-hand fighting in the open, in which the American troops greatly excelled.

This attack, which was the longest and largest scale operation conducted against the American troops since the entry of the United States into the war, has developed many deeds of individual bravery and heroism. A young Lieutenant, whose home is just outside of Boston, with three enlisted men, attacked nineteen Germans who had penetrated into one of the American trenches.

The Lieutenant called on the Germans to surrender. One of them raised his pistol, as if to shoot, but the Lieutenant shot him through the head, upon which the others lifted their hands high, in the air and yelled "Kamarad." The Lieutenant marched the prisoners in to the rear of our line, and then returned to the front and resumed the command of his platoon.

Five other Americans penitrated into a German dugout where twelve of the enemy were slightly wounded. The Germans resisted surrender, but our men threw grenades into the dugout, killing four of the foe. The others quickly gave themselves up.

Bandsmen Bore Stretchers.

A small party of bandsmen volunteered for stretcher-bearing duty in the first line, and worked until they were nearly exhausted. The chief surgeon ordered them to return for a rest, but they hid until the surgeon disappeared, and then resumed their first-aid duties.

A courier, 19 years old, who carried a message more than two miles under heavy shellfire fell exhausted after delivering his message into the hands of the commander of the unit. After a short rest he begged to be allowed to continue his front-line courier service.

Another Lieutenant, commanding a machine gun unit, just missed being struck by a shell which buried the gun, but he ordered his men to dig out the piece, and soon had it firing again into the German positions.

Scores of officers and men who had been assigned to rear-line duty, pleaded for an opportunity to go to the front line. The artillerymen also did courageous work and furnished wonderful support for the American infantry.

GERMANS CLAIM SUCCESS.

Berlin Reports "Successful Thrust" Against Americans.

BERLIN, April 14, (via London.)—German troops, according to the official report from headquarters today, made a successful attack against the Americans north of St. Mihiel. The statement says:

"North of St. Mihiel we carried out a successful thrust against American troops. We inflicted heavy losses on them and brought back prisoners."

OUR AIRMEN DOWN TWO FIGHTING PLANES

Lieuts. Winslow and Campbell Win War Cross—One Strictly American-Trained.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, April 14, (Associated Press.)—Two German fighting planes were shot down this morning inside the American lines by Lieutenants A. S. Winslow of Chicago and Douglas Campbell of California. Each man bagged one machine. Both the enemy aviators were made prisoner. One of them was slightly wounded.

The machines, which formed part of a patrol of five aircraft, were brought down after a six-minute engagement. One of the enemy machines fell in flames, but the other was only slightly damaged. It is believed that Lieutenant Campbell is the first graduate of a strictly American school to bring down an enemy machine.

The American aviators were encamped when enemy machines were signaled as crossing the line. Fifteen minutes later the American pilots sighted the enemy machines and immediately engaged them.

Both the captured machines were placed on exhibition in the public square of a town behind the American lines, where they were viewed by thousands of persons, who came from miles around.

The French General commanding the zone in which the machines were shot down congratulated the Americans on their "beautiful exploit."

Both Lieutenants received the War Cross.

CASUALTIES TO OLD 69TH.

South Orange Man Among Dead—Some of the Wounded.

Among the dead reported in yesterday's casualty list from General Pershing was Corporal Winthrop V. Rodewald of 440 William Street, South Orange, N. J., whose death was due to accident. Corporal Rodewald was a member of Company M, 165th Infantry, formerly the 69th Regiment of this city. There are six other names in the casualty list which may prove to be those of 165th men, but owing to the fact that the names do not conform in every way with those in the directory of the Rainbow Division, they are not given.

Other 165th men who have been identified as among those reported as wounded in previous lists from General Pershing, all of whom are members of Company K, are:

DOUGHNEY, FRANK, Sergeant, 884 East 163th Street, the Bronx.

DOWLING, PATRICK, private, Bayonne, N. J.

GULLY, JOSEPH, private, 530 East Fifteenth Street, New York.

HENLON, WILLIAM R., private, Port Jervis, N. Y.

LOEDESDORF, ALFRED, private, 59 Palmetto Street, Brooklyn.

McELROY, B. J., Sergeant, Ireland.

How the 165th Regiment stood in front line trenches while the Germans laid down a heavy barrage of artillery fire, how they were under orders not to fire a shot unless the enemy came over the top, for fear of disclosing their positions, is explained in a letter received from Sergeant Thomas E. Fitzsimmons of South Orange, son of Village Clerk M. A. Fitzsimmons.

The young man, a graduate of the South Orange High School, enlisted a year ago. He writes that they had just taken their places in the first-line trenches when things began to happen and the signal for a gas attack was given, which attack lasted about twenty minutes.

The Sergeant, Lieutenant McNamara, left the trench during the heavy fire to inspect the positions of the one-pounders. Although shells burst all around them they escaped injury. Attempting to return, they found the ground caved in and under heavy fire and were forced to find a new path back to shelter.

"The main object of their barrage was to cause us to lose our heads in the face of death, fire on them and thereby give away our position to their artillery. This we didn't do, and, believe me, if they ever attempted to come over, oh, boy, what we had prepared for them!"

Relatives of George F. Cook, whose home was 120 Webster Avenue, Yonkers, received word yesterday that he had been lost at sea. Cook had been in the navy since he was sixteen years old. Shortly after word was received that Cook had been lost, another message came announcing the safe arrival in France of James D. Cook, a brother, who is in the army. Another brother, Joseph Cook, is in the New York Division at Camp Wadsworth.

CAPTURED, BUT CONFIDENT.

Three American Doctors Show Spirit of "Dogged Tenacity."

STOCKHOLM, April 14.—The Svenska Dagbladet's correspondent with the German armies on the western front report a conversation with three captured American doctors. He says:

"None of them was enthusiastic for the war, but they exhibited the same spirit of dogged tenacity as the British prisoners. They had the greatest confidence in America's newly organized army, saying: 'If we don't get over this year, we shall be here next year.'"

TO LOOK INTO PIER LEASE.

"Al" Smith Says He Will Make an Investigation Today.

Alfred E. Smith, President of the Board of Aldermen, who introduced on Jan. 17 a resolution for the purpose of preventing the "scalping" of leases for the city piers by speculators, said last night that he would make a thorough investigation today of the letting of Pier 69. Both Mayor Hylan and Controller Craig have defended Dock Commissioner Hulbert in tendering the lease of Pier 69 to a "dummy" company at $25,000 a year, although the company which has been renting the pier for years was offering $30,000. Mr. Smith said last night:

"I don't know any of the facts of the case at present, but I will know all of them tomorrow. Commission Hulbert, I understand, has not yet told his side of the case. I intend to take up the matter with him tomorrow. This is a subject in which I am very much interested and I would be thoroughly informed now, except for my rheumatism."

Mr. Smith's resolution was referred by the Sinking Fund Commission to Commissioner Hulbert on Jan. 17 for his suggestion in relation to it. Mr. Smith said Commissioner Hulbert had not yet replied. One feature of the Smith resolution provided that the owner of a lease to city property who sublet the city property should give a statement to the city naming the figure at which the property was sublet, so that private transactions in such leases would be recorded and would give complete information as to the renting value of city property.

BROOKLYN CHARITY DRIVE.

Children Parade to Bring Gifts for Jewish Federation.

A parade of 4,000 children yesterday through the streets of the Brownsville section of Brooklyn, and a large overflow mass meeting last night in the Stone Avenue Talmud Torah brought in many gifts of money and members to the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities in its drive for $500,000 for the maintenance and annual support of its numerous affiliated organizations. It was not known last night what the total contributions amounted to, but the drive will be continued until the desired amount is received, although the end of the drive had been scheduled for today.

67 More Casualties in Our Overseas Army; 3, First Reported Dead, Were Only Wounded

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—General Pershing today reported to the War Department 67 casualties, bringing the total of casualties of our overseas army forces to 3,515. Ten were reported killed in action, 3 died of wounds, 4 of disease, 2 of accident, and 2 of other causes, while 11 were severely wounded and 31 slightly wounded. Four are reported missing in action. General Pershing's cable contained three corrections—the names of three privates erroneously reported as having been killed in action, but now reported severely wounded.

One commissioned officer, Lieutenant John J. Galvin, was reported killed in action. Another commissioned officer, Lieutenant Edmund Patton Glover, died of wounds. Two commissioned officers are reported as missing in action, and three as having been wounded.

The War Department does not announce the addresses of officers and soldiers in its casualty lists, but in each case telegraphic notice is immediately sent to the next of kin.

SUMMARY OF CASUALTIES TO DATE.

RALLY FOR THE 27TH.

Appeal for 2,000 Volunteers to Fill Out Spartanburg Division.

Augustus Thomas, Marcus M. Marks, and Captain Tristram Tupper were the speakers yesterday afternoon at a patriotic rally and recruiting meeting at the West Side Y. M. C. A., Fifty-seventh Street, near Eighth Avenue.

Captain Tupper explained that the 27th Division at Spartanburg needed 2,000 men to replace others who have been promoted or taken into other regiments. He appealed to all men from 18 to 21 and 31 to 40 to assist "in driving the Germans back to the Rhine. If we don't do it, our children and our children's children will have to do it," he said.

Following the meeting a recruiting Sergeant signed up a number of recruits.

The New York Times Dispatches Studied in High School

IN the South Side High School at Newark, N. J., the pupils of which number between 1,000 and 1,500, The New York Times dispatches from Philip Gibbs at the British battlefront are daily used in the study of history. The students consider the dispatches from Mr. Gibbs in a "discussion of current events"—a part of the history course.

Mr. Gibbs' correspondence for two years has been employed in the history class for the information of the students and as a basis for exercises. Since the present great battle began his dispatches have stimulated especial interest.

Miss Helen G. Stevenson, the instructor in history, said:

"Sympathy, strict accord, and affection for our allies are essential to success. My history class, the seniors in the high school, to the number of 160, have been vitally interested in Mr. Gibbs' dispatches last Spring.

"Now that we are fighting side by side with the valiant men of whom Mr. Gibbs writes, the class, evenly divided as to sex, I feel sure has this sympathy. The articles furnish just what the students need to feel the war at home. The news is brought home in its freshness and truth in a style that could hardly be surpassed."

Miss Stevenson expressed the opinion that other teachers of history should employ the dispatches of Mr. Gibbs for classroom use, as through them a better realization of the magnitude of the world struggle might be had.

CALL GRAFT AFTERTHOUGHT

Dr. Frankel to Call on Mayor Today for Publicity—No Denial of Desire to Lop Off Heads.

Dr. Lee K. Frankel, Chairman of the Committee of Twenty-one, selected on Saturday at the meeting of civic and social workers at the Bar Association, will communicate today with Mayor Hylan, requesting him to make an appointment for the committee to discuss the Mayor's investigation of the Health Department. The Committee of Twenty-one will endeavor to prove to the Mayor that the public interest in the investigation will best be served by public hearings by the Civil Service Commission and Commissioner of Accounts Hirshfield, who are jointly conducting the investigation.

Persons interested in the investigation were considerably mystified yesterday by the statement made by James E. MacBride, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, who said that the investigation was based on allegations of graft in the Health Department, and that affidavits in his possession named the heads of two bureaus of the department.

It was pointed out that on last Thursday evening, when Health Commissioner J. Lewis Amster appeared before the Public Education Committee of the Academy of Medicine at the committee's request, to explain the reason for the Health Department investigation and its scope, he made no mention of any allegation of irregularities in the department.

Following his conference with the Public Health Committee, statement of Commissioner Amster's explanation was made to reporters by Dr. Lewinski-Corwin, Secretary of the committee. Commissioner Amster was present when Dr. Lewinski-Corwin said that the Commissioner had told the committee that the investigation was only concerned with the determination of whether or not the directors of seven of the bureaus of the Health Department held their places legally under the City Charter. Up to Saturday it had been reported that in the event of the Civil Service Commission deciding that the seven directors hold their positions illegally, the Mayor would order the abolishment of the bureaus, the work then to be divided among the Assistant Sanitary Superintendents in the various boroughs.

Shakeup Scheme Not Denied.

Publication of these reports evoked no denial from the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioner of Accounts, or the Mayor. The belief that the investigation into alleged grafting in the department was an afterthought was indicated, it was said yesterday, by the fact that on April 8, when Mayor Hylan directed Chairman MacBride to look into the affairs of the Health Department, he mentioned nothing of graft or of alleged financial irregularities. The Mayor, in his letter of instructions to the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, said:

"I wish you to know that it is my desire that the commission immediately begin and honestly conduct in the most minute detail a thorough investigation of the Department of Health with a view to correcting every existing evil; removing from its payroll the names of all persons found to be illegally employed, and reducing to their proper status all persons who are enjoying the emoluments of grades higher than those for which they took promotion tests.

"The Health Department for several years past has, without doubt, been a most flagrant violator of civil service law. New bureaus have been created and higher salaries have been paid without authority of law."

The Mayor went on to say that he wanted to have the Health Department become a model for all other city departments.

With the announcement of the opening of the investigation Chairman MacBride also made a statement, in which he said that a large number of places had been filled without proper promotion examinations having been passed by the incumbents, and he repeated the allegation of the Mayor that new bureaus had been created without authority of law.

In this connection it was also said that the Civil Service Commission had no authority to investigate graft, that its jurisdiction is limited to matters having to do with the civil service law and that the Commissioner of Accounts is the sole person whose duty it is to investigate financial irregularities in any city department. When asked about this last point, Chairman MacBride said that Commissioner of Accounts Hirshfield was sitting with the Civil Service Commission in the investigation.

May Refer to Salary Split.

In informed quarters yesterday it was believed that the allegations of graft made by Chairman MacBride concern the practice of salary splitting which was uncovered by Commissioner of Accounts Wallstein in the last administration. This practice was an attempted private adjustment of salaries. Persons doing equal work sometimes received unequal pay and the head of a department might rule that those receiving the higher salary should share the excess with the others who were getting less.

In his report to Mayor Mitchel Commissioner of Accounts Wallstein condemned the practice as being a violation of the rules of the Civil Service Commission as well as of the law and Mayor Mitchel thereupon sent a letter to all department heads ordering them to stop the practice if it were going on in their departments.

Civil service and labor organizations continued yesterday to make public statements shewing their interest in the investigation. George T. Keyes of the Civil Service Reform Association said:

"The attitude of the Civil Service Reform Association is this: We all believe in an investigation of any department when it is warranted. We are not interested in pre-judging any case. We would be keenly interested if it were shown that the civil service law had been violated. If Chairman MacBride of the Civil Service Commission finds that the law has been violated, he will find us right behind him and ready to back him up. If there is graft in the Health Department we are sure the public would like to see the investigation open, so that they might learn without delay of all the facts in the case."

The Labor Sanitation Conference, which was formed more than a year ago to provide ways and means for labor to express its sanitary needs and to establish direct communication with the official sanitary agencies of the city, State, and nation, made public yesterday the protests of a number of labor leaders, including Leon H. Rouse, President of Typographical Union No. 6; John J. Crimmins, Secretary-Treasurer of Printing Pressmen Assistants' Union No. 23, and Philip Umstadter, President of the New York Printing Pressmen's Union No. 51. The statements of the union men protested against the possibility of the abolishing of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, of which Dr. Louis I. Harris is head.

Labor's Interest Large.

James J. Bagley, Secretary of the Labor Sanitation Conference, who made public the statements of the labor leaders, after referring to the work of the conference, said:

"We now find that an investigation is being made with the avowed purpose of 'eliminating the bureau heads.' Our close work with the department has led us to believe that the interest of the people of our city will be better covered by a system which allows for the proper responsibility and administration of the various activities of the Health Department.

"Labor men in the City of New York have been made to realize to a greater degree than ever before the great significance of the protection of the health of the community through the efforts that have been made, especially by Dr. Louis I. Harris, in the care of children, women, and men in industry. Though the work was but recently organized, enough has already been done in this direction to show its vast possibilities. The Health Department does not stop its work in the protection of children with the granting of working papers, but it follows them into the factories in which they spend a great part of their lives, and prevents the diseases which formerly were only registered in the Health Department after the damage had been done. In other words, the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, in common with the other bureaus of the department, prevents diseases, and in this work has set a standard for Health Departments throughout the country to follow.

"The statements of these men were not made at random, but by men of experience whose organizations maintain sanitariums of their own, and therefore can well appreciate the work that has been done by the Bureau of Preventable Diseases. If an epidemic of contagious disease, especially during this war period, should occur in the City of New York, and if untried and inexperienced hands directed the efforts to control such an epidemic, or if there was any relaxation in the safeguards which protect the lives of children during the school period, or when they go into industry, the citizens of New York in general, and those interested in the protection of working people in particular, would strongly feel that saving at the expense of the lives and health of the community, is a most dangerous form of economy.

Want Only Greater Efficiency.

"The Labor Sanitation Conference is in favor of any investigation that will tend to increase the efficiency of the Department of Health, but will oppose, and will endeavor to have the entire rank and file of the labor movement oppose, any removal of bureau heads unless it can be shown to make for greater efficiency."

Leon H. Rouso, President of Typographical Union No. 6, an organization of 6,000 compositors, and of the Manhattan branch of the American Alliance of Labor and Democracy, said:

"Any attempt to economize in the work of industrial hygiene after the splendid co-operation that labor has advanced with the leadership and guidance of Dr. Harris would be at this time a calamity, in my opinion. At no time in the history of our civil and national life should the health of the workers of this community be neglected, and least of all in the present crisis with which our country is confronted. If the war is to be won the worker in the industrial trench must be protected by adequate health supervision as to sanitation and industrial hygiene, and to discontinue this in any shape, way or form would be a disaster and a step backward in every conceivable way. They must furnish the sinews of war to protect the boys in the trenches, and therefore their health should be protected in order to accomplish this purpose."

John J. Crimmins, Secretary-Treasurer of Printing Pressmen Assistants Union 23, an organization of 3,000, said:

"The interest of labor men aroused during the past three years by the performances of the Division of Industrial Hygiene, organized by Dr. Louis I. Harris, Director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, has brought workingmen and women into closer relationship with the preventive activities of the respective Bureaus of the Health Department than ever before in the history of the city. The prevention of tuberculosis, as well as its diagnosis and treatment in the clinics of the Health Department, has become better organized and better known since it has been associated with intense work in industrial hygiene. The labor men of the City of New York would regard it as nothing short of a calamity if the preventive and educational work of the Health Department was destroyed in effectiveness through any attempt at economy which is not true economy."

Philip Umstadter, President of New York Printing Pressmen's Union 51, an organization of 2,500, said:

"Labor men and women in this city make a plea for the retention of the best features in the health administration of this city, and strongly urge against any ill-advised attempt to weaken the present system of health control by the elimination of bureau heads. While labor is mindful of the value of the various types of activity of the Health Department bureaus, it wishes most emphatically to indorse the work of Dr. Louis I. Harris, and to plead against any change which would cause the city to lose the services of one whom labor has come to know and trust."

MAYOR HYLAN ANGERS CITY LAW DEPARTMENT

Resignations Expected to Result from Letter to Corporation Counsel Criticising His Staff.

Resignations of a number of members of the city's Law Department are expected to be handed in to Corporation Counsel Burr within the next few days as a result of a letter sent to Mr. Burr by Mayor Hylan. The letter was written several weeks ago, but few of Mr. Burr's assistants knew of it until recently. Several of the most valued assistants, who have been in office for years, are so resentful over the letter which they describe as "insulting" and as reflecting on the entire staff of the Law Department, that they are contemplating leaving the department. The letter is as follows:

Dear Mr. Burr:

On several occasions I have been at meetings where we have been delayed in disposing of matters because of the delay in the Corporation Counsel's office in advising us of our rights in the matter. Many of your assistants are of the old school and do not believe in hurrying. I wish you would get rid of those just as fast as possible that will not be on duty at 9 o'clock, and who delay in getting out their work.

The work in the Corporation Counsel's office must be speeded up, and I think that the sooner you get new men in your office all along the line the better it will be for all concerned. I know you are endeavoring to do the best you can, and, if you ask for the resignations of a few men that are credited with a pull and held their jobs through many administrations, you will be rendering great service to the people of the city. I do not care who is behind men in your office, and I do not care what their great legal reputation may be. There are many men that are anxious to secure these positions, who will perform better work than is being performed.

The Corporation Counsel's office is one of the most important offices in the city, and I want no one in your office conferring with or aiding any interests that are against the best interests of the people of the city. The purpose, as I understand it, is to load up your office with a lot of matters, so that the more important matters cannot be given the attention that is required.

The old matters in your office must be cleaned up without delay and just as fast as they can be disposed of. I hope you will give this matter your immediate attention, as I am not very much impressed with some of the assistants under you that have been in the office for some time.

Very truly yours,
JOHN F. HYLAN, Mayor.

When the contents of the letter became known there was much speculation over its meaning. It was held in some quarters that it was all a plan on the part of the Mayor to join William R. Hearst in holding a club over Tammany Hall just as the State political campaign is opening. A number of the employes of the Corporation Counsel's office are Tammany men, and the Mayor's threat to clean out the department has been taken to mean that the Mayor will be disappointed if Tammany does not favor the nomination of Mr. Hearst for Governor. The patronage of the office has always been considered most valuable from a political point of view, especially in the matter of building up a political machine.

SEEKS NEW CONGRESS TERM

Representative Gray of New Jersey Announces His Candidacy.

Representative Edward W. Gray of New Jersey announced yesterday his candidacy for re-election from the Eighth New Jersey District. In making the announcement Mr. Gray said:

"With me, country is first. I have supported the Administration in all its measures for the successful prosecution of the war, and I shall continue to do so as a matter of patriotic duty. I shall continue to urge a speeding up of the entire war program as a vital national necessity. Swifter and sterner punishment should be meted out to enemy agents in this country. I favor legislation to that end. Our boys are fighting a savage and implacable foe in France, and we should not for a moment submit to their being undermined by malevolent enemies at home.

"I shall take no part in factional party strife in my district. I shall discuss no political subjects not vital to the one great issue. I shall take no time for campaigning that should be given to my public duties. My heart and soul are in the American cause, and, whether re-elected or not, I shall strive with all my might to aid in bringing victory to American arms and in preserving the cherished liberties and institutions of our beloved country."

TO FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS.

State Charities Aid Takes Action to Save Men Rejected by Draft.

Details of a movement to aid local health authorities to deal with tuberculosis growing out of war conditions are announced by the Tuberculosis Committee of the State Charities Aid Association. Two physicians have been placed at the disposal of health authorities throughout the State to aid in establishing dispensaries and providing medical oversight and sanitary supervision.

A large increase in the number of known cases of tuberculosis is being disclosed by the medical examination under the draft, and these men are being sent home. It is estimated that approximately 25,000 cases of tuberculosis will have been disclosed and rejected from military service.

The great majority of these cases must remain at home, hence the need for medical oversight, instruction, and assistance.

The physicians selected are Dr. Elliott Washburn, former Superintendent of the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Rutland, Mass., and Dr. Charles S. Prest of the New York State Department of Health.

MORE ZIONIST SUPPORT.

Greece and Holland Added to Countries Favoring Jewish Homeland.

The Provisional Executive Committee for General Zionist Affairs, in an announcement yesterday, added Greece and Holland to the list of countries which have indorsed the Palestine Jewish homeland project. M. H. Z. Kahn, President of the Dutch Zionist Federation, is quoted as saying he had been authorized to express the sympathetic attitude of Holland and a declaration by the Greek Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Politis, to the Chamber of Deputies on March 14, is cited as evidence that the Greek Liberal Government is supporting the movement.

The committee said that because more than 50 per cent. of the delegates to the contemplated Jewish Congress in Russia were Zionists the Bolshevist Government had announced that it would receive no better treatment than the Ukraine Rada. It was decided therefore to postpone the congress.

ADMIRES OUR SOLDIERS.

French Minister's Son Pays High Compliment to Their Qualities.

LONDON, March 12, (Associated Press.)—First Lieutenant Gilbert Clementel, son of the French Minister of Commerce and Transportation, who has been attached to a division of the American army now in the trenches, paid a tribute of admiration to the American troops in a letter written to Paul D. Cravath of New York and recently received here. Writing of the conduct of American troops in action, he declared:

"As a nearby spectator I can say that I am absolutely astonished. These Americans are wonderful soldiers. With their determination, their dash, and their vigor it will not take long for them to become a most accomplished army. Truly these are brave men! At one moment in the action I wanted to embrace them, so great was my admiration."

FORM DISTRICT KEHILLAHS.

Jews Establish Eighteen Organizations in New York.

The announcement was made yesterday at the offices of the Jewish Community, 356 Second Avenue, that the Jews of the city in the last few weeks had formed eighteen district organizations throughout the city to bring co-operative effort to the solution of various social problems peculiar to the Jewish population of the city. Each of the district organizations, to be known as a District Kehillah, according to Harry Sackler, Administrative Secretary of the Jewish Community, will aim to take up all the local problems within its own territory. The Jewish Community will act as the central body.

Scouts to Parade for the Red Star.

Boy Scouts will be the feature of a parade at 4 o'clock today to inaugurate a week's campaign under the auspices of the Bide-a-Wee Home for Animals in East Thirty-six Street as part of a national drive by the American Red Star to raise funds for ambulances and hospitals for war dogs and horses. Police dogs and others, including "Officer Rex," owned by Vernon Castle, who lost his life on an aviation training field, will be in the parade, which will start at Madison Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street and move to Madison Square.

TAMMANY IGNORED IN FIGHT ON HEARST

Up-State Democratic Leaders Will Confer Without Murphy's Aid.

DO NOT WANT A CITY MAN

Only a "High-Calibre Candidate" from Above the Bronx, They Insist, Can Beat Whitman.

In the call for a conference at Syracuse on April 24 sent out last week by up-State Democratic leaders Tammany leaders have been entirely ignored. By eliminating New York City organization Democrats, the up-State Democrats it was said, yesterday, intended to serve notice upon the friends and boomers of William R. Hearst that he was not wanted for Governor. Charles F. Murphy is said to be in entire accord with the plans of the up-State men, as the Tammany organization is also opposed to the selection of Hearst and intends to take no part in the deliberations of the party councils outside of the city at this time.

Murphy and his Tammany advisers, however, will have their say regarding the selection of a candidate later. During the latter part of July or early in August, there will be an unofficial State convention called at Saratoga. It will be along the lines of the unofficial convention held at Saratoga two years ago when Judge Samuel Seabury was selected as the Democratic Gubernatorial candidate to run against Charles S. Whitman. Edwin S. Harris, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, has given his consent to the gathering, which is to be termed a conference.

The conference will be as near the lines of the old-time State convention as the primary law will allow and leaders from every section of the State will be on hand. It is also likely that women, for the first time, will be allowed to have a voice in the selection of a Gubernatorial candidate. It has also been decided to allow women to be present at the Syracuse conference. One woman leader from every county in the State, with the exception of the New York City counties, will be invited to attend, the New York City women being excluded on the same ground that the city men leaders are not wanted at this time, the conference being entirely an up-State affair.

Will Talk Over Candidates.

It was learned yesterday that at the Syracuse conference no particular candidate will be favored. Instead, there will be a general discussion of the political situation in the State, and the claims of the various candidates will be considered. The conference will insist, however, that this year is no time for the selection of a candidate from below the Bronx line, as only an up-State man will have a chance to defeat Governor Whitman. All the leaders have discussed the availability of the various candidates they will adjourn and present their views and recommendations at the Saratoga conference. The Syracuse conference will be purely formal and executive. The Saratoga conference will be wide open.

Alarmed at the growth of sentiment against William R. Hearst, both in the city and up-State, the Hearst agents have been unusually active during the last fortnight. Hearst representatives have gone all over the State and have tried hard to stem the tide of resentment against their candidate. These agents have told various leaders that Mr. Hearst, if nominated, will make the hardest kind of a fight against Whitman and will spend plenty of money. They also made the threat that Hearst would enter the primaries, if necessary, and make a contest against any candidate the Democrats put up, and that, if he is beaten, he will run for Governor as an Independent candidate.

Word has also reached several up-State leaders that the National Administration would like to see a strong Wilson men nominated by the Democrats this Fall. It would please Washington if George F. Johnson of Binghamton, was selected. Mr. Johnson is head of the Johnson, Endicott Shoe Company, and was a large contributor to the Wilson campaign fund in 1916. Although an ardent Wilson supporter, he is an independent Republican in politics, and the Democratic organization men do not look with favor upon the suggestion that he be selected. It is likely that the Democrats will fight shy of the patriotic issue during the campaign, leaving it largely to the voters to determine if a Democratic Governor would better uphold the National Administration than a Republican.

Although there are about a dozen candidates already in the Democratic field, interest during the last week has crystallized already in the Democratic

C. Walker of Binghamton, and Herbert P. Bissell of Buffalo. Friends of both men are active all over the State and they will have many advocates at the Syracuse conference. Friends of Mayor Lunn of Schenectady are also active, but his record as a radical is expected to alienate all the Democrats of conservative tendencies. Should the Hearst candidacy take on alarming proportions, an effort will be made both at Syracuse and at Saratoga to harmonize all interests in order to present a united front to what is termed the "Hearst menace."

One Way to Beat Hearst.

"The Syracuse conference will make it perfectly clear that the only way to beat Hearst is to select an up-State Democrat of high calibre," said a prominent Democrat yesterday. "The fight this year is an up-State fight, and only an up-State man will have a chance. Governor Whitman has made it so and the Democratic Party will make a prodigious mistake if it neglects the opportunities that lie before it. Whitman has lost strength with the farmers and there is a growing up-State opposition to him over the prohibition question. An up-State Democrat of high class, and there are plenty of them, would unite all these anti-Whitman elements, where a New York City man would be able to do nothing. Moreover, there is a strong feeling among up-State Democrats against the selection of a Tammany man.

"But more than anything else, the selection of an up-State Democrat would head off the Hearst candidacy. If Hearst is not nominated and a Tammany man is, Hearst will run on an independent candidate and draw enough votes from the Tammany candidate to insure the re-election of Whitman. Hearst will have no such excuse for running if an up-State man is selected as the standard-bearer."

All doubt that Hearst wants the Governorship nomination and will make a hard fight to get it was dispelled yesterday when his newspapers began an attack on the Standard Oil Company, in an effort to link that organization up with the State campaign. The "Standard Oil Letters," which were published several years ago were reprinted and the charge was made that the Standard Oil interests were behind the Republican Party this year.

In a statement in the New York American over his signature, answering an attack made upon him by Professor Sperry of the University of Syracuse, Mr. Hearst said:

"The attack is not seriously considered by Mr. Hearst for the other reason that he is a radical and must expect the abuse of the public plunderers whom it has been his privilege and pleasure to expose. The present attack seems to be based, however, on a misconception of the situation, a misconception which assumes that Mr. Hearst is anxious to run for Governor of New York at this coming election. Mr. Hearst is merely anxious to see a radical, and not a reactionary, nominated on the Democratic ticket to defeat Mr. Whitman, who has surrendered himself and his administration to the privileged interests and the public plunderers.

"Mr. Hearst feels that perhaps the radicalism of this age has passed beyond his principles and policies to a more extreme radicalism, and that the dangerous greed and aggression of the plundering and profiteering disloyalists of the Standard Oil type may require the fullest form of radical restriction and constriction. The purification of New York politics and the removal of the peculiar menace to public liberty and political morality which the Standard Oil Trust and similar oppressive institutions constitute is the sole object which Mr. Hearst has in mind, and he will not himself run unless that should prove the only way of accomplishing this patriotic purpose."

CALL FOR 49,843 MORE DRAFTED MEN

Will Be Sent to Forts and Barracks to Train with Regular Army Troops.

TO MOBILIZE EARLY IN MAY

Makes More Than 300,000 Selectmen Called Recently Under Speed-Up Program.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Another draft call, this time for 49,843 registrants, has been sent to Governors of States by Provost Marshal General Crowder. Mobilization of the men is ordered for May 1 and 10, the War Department announced tonight, and they will be sent to eleven forts and recruiting barracks, probably for training with regular army units there.

This call increases to more than 300,000 the number of selectmen ordered to camp since late in March. This is far in excess of the monthly average that would have been mobilized under the original plan to call 500,000 men this year over a nine-month period. Future calls at the same rate would complete the program before midsummer.

Under President Wilson's determination to hasten the dispatch of American troops to France to reinforce the British and French armies bearing the brunt of the great German drives in Flanders and Picardy, the whole program of the army is speeding up. Only a week ago General Crowder ordered mobilization of 130,000 selectmen for April 20, and their movement to the national army cantonments during the five days following.

Further announcements are expected to follow the return of Secretary Baker from his visit to the battlefronts and conference with officials of Great Britain, France, and Italy. Troops now are moving to Europe at a rapid rate, and this clearing of training camps will permit of the calling of men much faster than was contemplated before the German offensive made it imperative to rush men to the battlefronts.

Although every State and the District of Columbia are called upon to furnish men under General Crowder's latest order, nearly half of the 49,843 men will come from seven States. Illinois will supply by far the largest number, its quota being 8,047. Pennsylvania is next, with 3,776; New York third, with 3,242; Michigan fourth, with 2,508; Missouri, fifth, with 2,163; Wisconsin sixth, with 2,135, and Ohio seventh, with 2,090. Nevada has the lowest quota, 49, and Delaware the next lowest, 87. Wyoming, with 92, is the only other State to furnish less than 100 men.

The quotas of the other States and the District of Columbia follow:

Alabama	261	Montana	334
Arizona	318	Nebraska	987
Arkansas	589	New Hampshire	137
California	1,187	New Jersey	1,041
Colorado	696	New Mexico	274
Connecticut	959	North Carolina	481
Dist. of Columbia	197	North Dakota	581
Florida	203	Oklahoma	849
Georgia	316	Oregon	291
Idaho	165	Rhode Island	195
Indiana	842	South Carolina	289
Iowa	1,910	South Dakota	487
Kansas	1,210	Tennessee	402
Kentucky	1,150	Texas	1,084
Louisiana	353	Utah	168
Maine	220	Vermont	101
Maryland	433	Virginia	756
Massachusetts	1,336	Washington	474
Minnesota	1,293	West Virginia	549
Mississippi	320

The army posts to which the men will go are Fort Slocum, New York; Fort Thomas, Kentucky; Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia; Fort McDowell, California; Fort Screven, Georgia; Fort Logan, Colorado; Fort Sam Houston, Texas; Columbus Barracks, Ohio; Vancouver Barracks, Washington; Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, and Jackson Barracks, Louisiana.

CROWDER SEEKS RECRUITS.

Issues Calls for Volunteers for Special Military Service.

Provost Marshal Crowder has issued three new calls for men for voluntary induction into special branches of the military service. One call is for chemists, civil engineers, meteorologists, physicists, and is open only to men who are technically qualified in those professions. The call is for sixty men, and registrants who are accepted for this service will be sent immediately to Camp MacArthur, Texas, for instruction.

The second call is for camera repair men, who will be sent to Cornell University, while the third is for 100 laborers for service in the Ordnance Corps, these men to be sent to Fort Slocum. The meteorologists, it was said yesterday, are needed as weather observers in France in connection with the work of the flying corps of the army now operating on the French front. The camera men are also needed for the aviation service.

The United States Public Service Reserve, the New York office of which is at 22 East Twenty-second Street, has issued a call for 150 sailmakers, tailors, and awning makers who are qualified to work on airplane fabrics for the army. The men accepted must be between the ages of 18 and 47 years. Qualified men of draft age will be accepted.

Men Wanted for New Ships.

Lieutenant Commander Newton Mansfield, U. S. N., is directing a campaign which gets under way today, the purpose of which is to get an unlimited number of men for new ships which are now going into commission, and which will be commissioned in increasing numbers in the future.

"If our army is to be transported overseas safely," Commander Mansfield said, "we must have the men adequately to man the ships. This is a great opportunity for the young men who can qualify for this service. The time is now and not tomorrow. We want every fit man we can get."

The recruiting office for this service is at 34 East Twenty-third Street, near Fourth Avenue.

Recruiting to bring the New York Division of the Guard army, now training for the overseas service at Camp Wadsworth, S. C., will be redoubled this week and it is hoped to have the needed quota enlisted and on the way to Spartanburg before the end of the present week. Information as to the needs of the "Empire Division" can be had at the offices of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, on the sixth floor of the Hall of Records.

Appeal for Navy Recruits.

Ex-Secretary of the Navy Truman H. Newberry, who is now a Commander in the Naval Reserve, in an appeal issued in behalf of the recruiting service of the Regular Navy, says:

"The citizens of America are offered a splendid opportunity to do their duty and stand by their country; that is, in this war for freedom and humanity. All branches of the service are open, and any citizen from 18 to 38 years of age can take advantage of this splendid opportunity. If of draft age a letter from the local board will permit an enrollment for the period of the war.

"I don't wonder at your asking why men are so anxious to enroll for sea service in the reserve force service. The young American finds the highest inspiration in the deeds of the men of the United States Navy. Our navy, both in time of war and peace, has played the great and glorious part in the history of the world. Its service is of high ideals, and its record a worthy achievement due to the high standard set for officers and men in the beginning of its career, and maintained to date.

The Army and Navy Club of New York announces that through the courtesy of the Republican Club, where the army and navy organization has obtained temporary quarters, officers in all branches of the service when in New York will be entitled to all the privileges of the club. Guests cards will be issued to officers on application at the clubhouse, 54 West Fortieth Street.

MARKSMEN TEACH SOLDIERS

Pupils Even Learn to Make Repairs to Rifles While Blindfolded.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Announcement was made by the Ordnance Department of the Army tonight that it had called to its aid experts in shooting to train the draft and National Guard army men how to use, in the shortest possible time, the new rifles with which they are being equipped, known as the United States rifle, model of 1917, modified Enfield. Many of these experts were members of United States rifle teams which won international shooting matches.

In its announcement the Ordnance Department says:

"These experts, known as rifle demonstrators, were commissioned and sent to various camps to instruct officers and men in shooting and in the operation and care of the rifle.

"As an illustration of the work of these demonstrators, it is recorded from Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., that officers under instructions from them gave a demonstration in dismounting and assembling this rifle while blindfolded, the record time being seven minutes for dismounting and twenty-two minutes for assembling. There are eighty-six parts to the rifle. These officers will become instructors in mechanics classes, the mechanics being trained to make repairs to rifles in the field. Frequently these men will have to do their work at night, when they will not have a light or will not be allowed to use a light, and therefore they must be thoroughly trained in taking down the rifle and putting in new parts while blindfolded.

A representative from Camp Sherman, Ohio, and one from Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., states that both officers and men are much pleased with the 1917 model rifle, and that scores made by the troops have been remarkable in view of the fact that very few of them ever fired an army rifle of any kind before.

"The rifle demonstrators are under the control of the General Administration Bureau of the Ordnance Department and directed by Colonel John T. Thompson, U. S. Army, retired, who organized the group of demonstrators while in charge of the Small Arms Division."

CALLS FOR AIRPLANE SPRUCE

Navy Wants 3,000,000 Feet a Month from New England.

BOSTON, April 14.—A call for 3,000,000 feet of New England spruce a month for airplanes was sent out by the Navy Department today. By agreement with the army, according to Assistant Naval Constructor F. M. Smith, the navy has taken exclusive control of the development of the New England spruce, and steps have been taken to bring the output of this material up to its maximum during the Spring and Summer.

Exhaustive tests by the Federal Forestry Department have proved, Mr. Smith says, that the spruce of this district is equal in strength to the best spruce grown in the West. Since Dec. 1 lumber operators have been delivering to the Navy Department 1,000,000 feet a month. With the airplane industry now in a position to turn out more machines the Navy Department plans to treble its output.

The demands of the navy, it is pointed out, will not interfere with the important pulp-making industry, for the aviation requirements are so severe that only 7 per cent. of the spruce cut up meets specifications, the remainder being available for pulp. To eliminate waste and speed production, the New England States have been divided into fifteen districts, with fifteen inspectors to visit the mills and pass upon the product for airplane purposes.

The response of lumber operators and sawmill units to the call for service, naval officials say, has been as spontaneous as the answer to the call for volunteers to go abroad with the first lumber units at the outbreak of the war. Contracts have been entered into with practically all active mills throughout New England for their entire output of this class of material. To increase the output it is desired to open new tracts and install portable mills. Addresses of owners or operators of portable sawmills are wanted.

Benefit for Two Charities.

An entertainment for the benefit of the Fatherless Children of France and the Jewell Day Nursery will be given this afternoon at the Casino Theatre. Motion pictures, photographed in color, will show the Blackfeet Indians in Glacier Park, Kilauea Volcano, Hawaiian Islands, catapulting hydroplanes from an armored cruiser in the navy, a visit to the Wild Bird Island in the Pacific, and San Mateo Dahlia Farm. Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge is President of the nursery, which cares for the children of working mothers. Miss Luisita Leland is Chairman of the New York Committee for the Fatherless Children of France. This work supports the children in their own homes under their mothers' care.

Service Flag for Needle Work Guild.

A service flag is to be displayed by the Needle Work Guild of America for its members engaged in war work and among the stars will be three in gold for its members killed by German shells in the church of St. Gervais, Paris, on Good Friday. Mrs. Edward H. Landon and her two daughters, Mrs. Ralph Henry Speed and Miss Ruth Landon. The final meeting of the New York Branch of the Guild in its fifteen-day drive for new members, will be held this afternoon at its War Relief Rooms, 160 Fifth Avenue, at 3:30 o'clock.

POLICE CAPTURE 178 IN CHOP SUEY RAIDS

Assistant District Attorney Says Some Places Are Worst Dives in the City.

SLACKERS ARE ROUNDED UP

Campaign Against Such Places, Prosecutor Declares, Will Drive All Undesirables Out of This City.

The second of a series of raids on disorderly resorts and all-night restaurants where army and navy intelligence officers have complained that liquor had been sold to soldiers and sailors and numerous robberies committed began promptly at 2 o'clock yesterday morning with thirty chop suey restaurants in the Fourth Inspection District as objectives. When the round-up was completed at 6 o'clock Assistant District Attorney James E. Smith had ordered sixty-eight women and 110 men conveyed to the West Forty-seventh Street Station for further examination, and had questioned probably 1,000 as to their reasons for going to resorts which the District Attorney's office considers objectionable.

No arrests were made, but those who were taken to the police station were questioned as to their means of livelihood, and Mr. Smith exacted a promise from each one that he or she would not be found in the Chinese restaurants after hours in future. A list of the names of those detained was placed on file at the District Attorney's office for future reference, Mr. Smith said, and if needed in future they would be subpoenaed as witnesses.

"I thought I knew New York," said Mr. Smith after the last man had been examined at the station, "but I had no idea that some of the places we visited tonight existed. Some of these chop suey places are the worst dives in this city. We don't care a snap about the protests that may be made after these raids. There is no reason why, on Sunday morning in wartime, restaurants of this character should be crowded with the riff-raff of this city.

"The objects gained in these raids are manifold; there is some way in which liquor is being served to soldiers and sailors, and we have exceedingly reliable information that many chop suey places are offenders. In a Forty-fourth Street chop suey restaurant whisky and beer were found. Again, there are many persons left in this city who believe that the Sabbath should be observed. Chop suey restaurants at 2 o'clock or later in the morning are not fit places for young girls 16 and 17 years of age, and there were several of this age detained.

"I am sure we found persons who can give us information, and we certainly found slackers without registration cards. A number of persons are going to be subpoenaed to appear before District Attorney Swann, and the abolishment of private rooms in chop suey restaurants has been ordered."

Behind the automobile in which Mr. Smith rode from restaurant to restaurant on his long list trailed other cars carrying fifty detectives under Inspector Henry of the Fourth District, Acting Captain McKenna of the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau, and Captain Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station. Uniformed policemen who had been stationed at the entrances of the chop suey resorts barred the exits at 2 o'clock, holding those inside until the arrival of the Assistant District Attorney. In the cases of several of the restaurants he did not arrive until after 5 o'clock, so that many of those detained became restive, protesting against the delay.

They could establish their identity to the satisfaction of any one, many said, while it would be an outrage to further detain them in the station house without grounds. The scene in the guardroom of the West Forty-seventh Street Station was a study in practical and applied sociology. As they faced Mr. Smith those detained, for the most part young men and women, whose ages ranged from 16 to 35, represented nearly every class of business employe, and some who were unable to give a satisfactory account of themselves. Mr. Smith said last night that proceedings would be begun in a few days against the chop suey restaurants, on the ground that they were public nuisances. Speaking for District Attorney Swann, he said:

"We are just beginning this campaign. We will drive out of New York City divekeepers, gamblers, crooks, women of the streets, and all undesirables. Vice has been thriving for so long under a semi-respectable cloak that it imagines itself immune. They talk about property rights. What of the property rights of the decent people whose property has been ruined by this class? Since when have we ignored decency and selected lawlessness? What right have young men who ought to be in the trenches to be playing pool or sitting around Chinese restaurants with women of the streets at 4 o'clock in the morning?"

SAW HUSBAND SHOT DEAD.

Mrs. Colombo Witnesses Slaying with Five-Hour-Old Babe.

Mrs. Rose Colombo, of 73 Colden Street, Newark, lay in bed with her newborn infant yesterday and saw her husband shot and killed by Joseph Dalphio, 32, a boarder. Dalphio was captured by the police in a cellar two blocks away. According to the police a revolver containing five cartridges and an empty shell was found in his pocket, with $38.25 in a wallet, identified as the property of the slain man. The baby was only five hours old when his father was killed.

BISHOP LAWRENCE APPEALS

Urges Episcopalians to Subscribe to Liberty Loan and Save Food.

The War Commission of the Episcopal Church, 14 Wall Street, made public yesterday a statement from Bishop William Lawrence, Chairman of the War Fund Commission, in which he announced that the commission had raised approximately $600,000 for work with the troops in camp and field for 1918. The Bishop's statement also contained appeals to members of the church to subscribe to the Liberty Loan and to give such other assistance as they may be able to the Government. He wrote:

"The Third Liberty Loan makes its demand on every member of Christ's Church. The strength, the lives, and the victories of our boys and men depend directly upon their munitions, barracks, hospitals, ships, and supplies, and these depend directly upon your economies and sacrifices in subscribing to the Liberty Loan. For the support of our Allies and for our own defense, the Allies and all our people must have nutritious food; the soldiers and sailors must have the best food on which to fight. The man and women of the church will not wait for others to be frugal, and they will work upon the farms and gardens 'for the vindication of peace and justice.'"

WANT TRADE SUPERVISED.

Merchants Would Prepare America for Commercial Struggle.

The Merchants' Association of New York took a prominent part in the proceedings of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States during its sixth annual convention held in Chicago last week, according to the official bulletin of the association, Greater New York, issued here today. Resolutions approved by the association's Executive Committee for consideration by the convention looking toward the preparation of America for the commercial struggle after the war were discussed. The War Shipping Committee of the association, at the request of the National Chamber, submitted a report on shipbuilding.

The resolutions adopted provided for the appointment of an advisory board or commission of prominent men to generally supervise the nation's trade and commerce. This board will collect and analyze facts concerning the productive, industrial, and distributive business of our own country in their bearing on foreign trade.

S. C. Mead, Secretary of the association, in the report on shipbuilding recommends the return to the shipyards of their skilled men taken by the first draft, and exemption of skilled workmen from future drafts, and a uniform employment policy to assure an equitable and sufficient supply of labor at all shipyards, and the elimination of so-called "stealing of labor."

WHEAT BARRED BY HOTELS.

In Several, for First Time, No Bread Was Served.

All of the large hotels of the city for the first time yesterday put a total ban on wheat and wheat products in their service. In some hotels substitutes for bread were served in the form of corn cakes and muffins, while other hotels made no pretense even at serving substitutes for bread. Patrons accepted the new regulation without complaint and the novelty of eating a totally breadless meal for the first time proved in itself an enjoyable and interesting experience.

The Federal Food Board will open today its three-week campaign to increase the consumption of potatoes, which are now reaching the market in great quantities and which must be consumed before the next crop is brought forth, lest the farmers be discouraged by overproduction. Dr. Mary S. Rose, who was in charge of the milk exhibit at the Grand Central Terminal, announced yesterday that the exhibit would be continued until further notice, at the Hudson Park Branch Library at 66 Leroy Street.

Lauder to Speak at Opera House.

Final arrangements for the National War Work Council mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House next Sunday afternoon were announced yesterday from the office of William Sloane, Chairman of the council. Harry Lauder will speak and Governor Whitman will preside. A service band and the University Glee Club of eighty voices under the direction of Arthur D. Woodruff, will furnish music. Governor Whitman will present the problems of the Y. M. C. A. campaign to recruit the man necessary to take charge of the huts with the American Expeditionary Forces and the French and Italian armies.

War Takes Rockefeller Help.

War has compelled John D. Rockefeller to reorganize the help on his place at Pocantico Hills. Twenty-five men of draft age have been accepted for the national army, and Mr. Rockefeller has not claimed exemption for any of them, not even the farmers he employs. Several others have enlisted in the army and navy.

REPORTS IDLENESS AMID WAR ACTIVITY

Charity Organization Society Also Finds Considerable Suffering from Low Wages.

AID RENDERED RED CROSS

Bureau of Advice and Information Greatly Expanded to Meet Present Conditions.

Unemployment and low wages have been prevailing to a considerable degree in this city, in spite of general industrial prosperity, according to the annual report of the Charity Organization Society, which was issued yesterday.

"In the society's own work with families," the report says, "it came in contact during the last fiscal year with 5,069 families. A study made of 4,204 of these, with whom closer relations were established, showed the presence of unemployment and low earnings even in a time of industrial prosperity. In 297 of the families the male head of the family was out of work, and in 275 his employment was irregular. In 568 of the families the man was not earning because of disease, old age, or because he was in an institution. The majority of the men who were working were earning less than $18 a week, an amount which at present is generally conceded to be too small to support a family of four or five persons according to American standards of living. Many men were earning much less than $18 a week. Indeed, in 571 families the earnings of the men were reported to be between $12 and $14 a week. Thirty per cent. of the men and 29 per cent. of the women in the 4,204 families studied were native born. In only 23 per cent. of the families were no physical defects reported."

The society called attention in its report to the large number of members of its staff, trained in social service and relief work in this city, who had been called to responsible positions in the Red Cross. One of the activities which the Charity Organization Society undertook in 1917, and is now carrying on, has been that of investigating and reporting on war relief organizations soliciting subscriptions from the public. The report adds:

"A department of the society which has had in be extraordinarily expanded to meet war conditions, is the Bureau of Advice and Information which makes investigations and reports upon charitable activities. As the number of organizations engaged in collecting funds in New York City for various war relief activities began rapidly to increase, many were found to be conducted without regard for the standards of accounting and management which ordinary business ethics demand. The bureau has made a continuing investigation of the situation as regards agencies having headquarters in New York City, and has published the results in a bulletin which lists in three divisions the following groups of organizations: (1) Those submitting satisfactorily audited financial statements; (2) those submitting unaudited but otherwise satisfactory statements; (3) those under responsible management, but established too recently to supply financial statements. During the year 2,628 requests for reports and information about charitable agencies were received and answered by this bureau."

FRENCH CHILDREN NEED AID.

Refugees Fed, Clothed, and Cared For with American Money.

A cable message received yesterday at the headquarters in this city from the Paris committee of the French Heroes Lafayette Memorial Fund, Inc., announces a close working arrangement with the American Fund for French Wounded for the rescue and care of the refugee children from the bombarded parts of France. Numbers of these children, after being gathered in, fed, and clothed in Paris, have been sent to the Chateau de Chavaniac, birthplace of Lafayette, in Auvergne. There the American Fund for French Wounded has established a dispensary, supplied a resident physician, and will furnish all necessary medical supplies for the children.

The committee has cabled that it can take care of just as many of the thousands of refugee children as it receives funds from America with which to meet the necessary expenses. The French Heroes Fund here is devoting its every effort for the present to securing funds for these refugee children. It has made a nation-wide appeal, and the funds are cabled to Paris as fast as they are received. It asks that contributions be sent to James A. Blair, Jr., Treasurer, 360 Madison Avenue, New York City.

CARE FOR FRENCH ORPHANS.

Andre Tardieu to Speak Here in Behalf of Fund.

To care for the thousands of additional French orphans, resulting from the present drive of the Germans on the western front, steps are to be taken this week by the New York Committee of the Fatherless Children of France, headed by Miss Luisita Leland, to raise a large sum of money to meet the situation. This is in addition to the $2,500,000 which has already been collected by the society throughout the country, by means of which 50,000 orphans have been cared for.

Andre Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States, will come to New York next Friday afternoon and deliver an address at the home of Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, 14 West Fifty-eighth Street, in behalf of the fund. He will be accompanied by Miss Eleanor Fell, a delegate from the Paris Committee of the organization, who will tell of the actual work as it is being done in France at the present time.

THE MEANING OF GILLETTE SERVICE

The Gillette Service Experts and all Gillette dealers want to be of service to every Gillette user in town.

They will show you that little knack of the Gillette Shave—how to prepare the face for shaving; the correct angle stroke; the adjustment for a light or close shave.

Bring in your Gillette, have it looked over. It may be damaged, bent, out of alignment—They may make some valuable suggestions or put your razor in shape free of charge.

Try this when you shave tomorrow morning.

Lather the beard thoroughly, and rub well in—that's essential with any shave.

Put in a new blade and screw the handle down tight! Then if you want a specially close shave, unscrew the handle a part turn.

Hold the razor naturally and easily, and tilt the handle so you can just feel the blade engage the beard.

(Here's where some men make a mistake. They tilt the handle up or down too much and make a scraper of a Gillette instead of a razor.)

Then shave with short slanting strokes. It doesn't require any brute force to shave with a Gillette—the razor does the work.

Keep the edge of the blade as nearly flat against the skin as you can. Any man will catch the knack of using his Gillette in one or two shaves so he won't feel the slightest pull. (In fact, when the Gillette is properly used the beard slips off without your knowing it.

The all-important thing is to lather well, and to hold the razor easily, with the handle tilted so the blade just engages the beard.

Announcing Gillette Service Week

THE Gillette Company inaugurates here this week an event of interest to every man who uses a Gillette Safety Razor.

It is here to see its friends and customers: to meet the friends of its friends.

It is here with a dozen Service Experts—to discuss the best and quickest methods of shaving.

It is here in all the Stores with the latest New Models in Gillette Razors and Shaving Sets:

To greet you personally and to talk to you every day in the newspapers:

To tell you some new and interesting things about Razors, about Blades and about the Art of Shaving.

THE Gillette is the greatest razor business in the world—many times the largest.

There is no kind of shaving problem in the world that the Gillette has not met successfully. No type of face or beard, no texture of skin; no Race, or climate or condition of use, but is an old story to the Gillette.

It goes further and says if there is a man anywhere who does not find the Gillette Shave the best shave, and the Gillette Razor the best razor—it is simply because he has not caught the simple knack of using it.

And it is here in town this week, not only to say these things, but to prove them.

The Gillette is the one world-wide razor success—with ten million users; increasing at the rate of a million razors a year—and a blade production in its American factories alone of seven-hundred-thousand dozen a month.

WITH the Gillette, service is a mission—not an incident. It recognizes its ten-million customers as friends—not as a mass of individuals who buy Gillette razors and blades.

The Gillette feels always that its business is different from most other businesses. The service it renders is more particular and intimate. It's a personal service.

Perhaps you don't yet know the Gillette. Perhaps you are one of those few who have been missing something big in life's line of least resistance.

If so, we want you for both our sakes to join the ten-million Gillette users all over the world.

Perhaps you believe that your particular quality of skin and beard are peculiar to you. Or that no one else has your same razor problem.

This isn't so. Now get this:—

There isn't a man alive whose actual skin, beard, and shaving conditions haven't been duplicated and solved thousands of times by the Gillette. It's an old story with us—an experience that's universal.

Maybe you were a Gillette user once upon a time. And then you relapsed into the barber-shop habit again. If so, shake off a time-wasting habit. We won't consider the money at all.

But do what the successful men are doing—the big men who are getting the work of the world done.

These men don't lose valuable time sitting around in barber shops. They don't cut into their day. They are through, and on the job, long before they would get the call "next" if they were the waiting kind.

GET the clear ruddy look of the men who shave themselves—who are not dependent upon others—the most democratic and independent men in the world.

Join the army of men who make shaving an incident—not an event.

Our Service Experts will be in many of the Gillette Stores in your city this week. They want to help you to help yourself.

If you are not yet a Gillette user, let them show you why you should become one.

If you are a Gillette user perhaps they can show you how to make your Gillette even more useful.

IF you can't get around to see them remember this:

Hold the razor naturally and easily, and tilt the handle so you can just feel the blade engage the beard.

(Here's where some men make a mistake. They tilt the handle up or down too much and make a scraper of a Gillette, instead of a razor.)

Keep the edge of the blade as nearly flat against the skin as you possibly can. Then shave with short, slanting strokes.

Most men get the best results by screwing the blade tight down to the guard. But if you want an extra close shave, just unscrew the handle a part turn, to loosen the edge a trifle from the guard.

No matter what kind of a beard or skin you may have, you'll get a clean, safe, individual shave.

No Stropping—No Honing.

CHAPLAIN DISLOYAL, SOLDIERS TESTIFY

Witnesses at Court-Martial of Capt. Feinler Swear That He Predicted German Victory.

SIDED WITH LA FOLLETTE

Accused Officer Admits at Honolulu Hearing That He Gave Out Copies of Anti-War Speech.

Captain Franz J. Feinler, U. S. A., the German-born army Chaplain who went to France with one of the regular army regiments and was returned to this country by order of General Pershing because of his alleged pro-German views, has been court-martialed at Honolulu on eighteen specifications, which involve uttering treasonable statements and carrying on active propaganda in favor of the enemy. He is also charged with uttering "disrespectful and contemptuous" language against the President, the Secretary of War, and his military superiors at Honolulu.

Chaplain Feinler was returned to the United States on the same vessel as David A. Henkes, the former regular army Captain who was recently sentenced by a Governors Island court-martial to serve twenty-nine years in the military prison at Leavenworth because of his seditious activities.

When Chaplain Feinler arrived back in the United States it was decided not to court-martial him, but to transfer him to Honolulu for duty. It was supposed that he had learned a lesson and that he would at least refrain from expressing pro-German sentiments. From the evidence produced at the court-martial it appears that the Chaplain had been in Honolulu only a short time when he began to express his views and to give certain advice to enlisted men which was of a nature not tending to the maintenance of discipline or loyalty in the subject.

The witnesses against Feinler include Captain Frank J. Dougherty, Captain Herbert E. Wescott, Dr. James R. Judd, a Honolulu physician; Mrs. J. T. Warren, J. H. Soper, Sergeant Major John Wright, U. S. A.; Lieutenant Eben S. Cushingham, Quartermaster Sergeant and Mrs. Frederick R. Shaw, and several other civilian witnesses.

Here are some of the remarks which it is charged Feinler uttered, and on which he is now facing an army court:

"You must remember how this country joined hands with England at the outbreak of the war, and at the very same time that Wilson said the country was neutral."

"They have one man (Baker) at the head of the army and another at the head of the navy (Daniels) who cannot run their own affairs, and certainly cannot run the affairs of the Government."

"You don't want to believe all you have read about the wonderful fighting spirit of the French soldier. If it were not for the firing squads in the French Army they would have few men on the firing line."

Defended Lusitania Sinking.

The court-martial specifications also allege that Feinler said that the British press never printed how "the Belgian women poured hot water on the poor German troops"; that the American troops treated the Filipinos in the same manner as the Germans treated the Belgians; that the American troops in France are always drunk, and that he had heard an American Major in France say that unless a scaffold was built or a few firing squads organized to suppress crime among the troops under General Pershing he would quit the army. Feinler is also alleged to have said that "the way the American Army is handled in France is a joke."

Concerning the sinking of the Lusitania, Feinler is alleged to have said "that Germany did right in sinking the Lusitania, as she had warned people not to travel on her for the simple reason that she had absolute information the vessel was carrying munitions of war; that anybody who lost his life on the Lusitania lost it because he did not heed the warning," &c.

It is also charged that he denounced Miss Edith Cavell, the English nurse who was murdered by the Germans, as an English spy, and to have added that "a spy is a spy, whether man or woman, but a woman always looks for sympathy."

The Army and Navy Register of Washington prints five columns of the testimony given at the trial of Chaplain Feinler.

The testimony of Sergeant Major Wright, as reported, is among the most interesting offered.

"Did the Chaplain ever say anything about Liberty bonds?" Captain Peale, the Judge Advocate, asked Sergeant Wright.

"I asked the Chaplain what he thought about the Liberty bonds," replied the witness, "and he said he thought any one who bought bonds was crazy."

"Did the Chaplain ever say anything about Mexico?"

"I asked the Chaplain if he thought Pershing could trim Mexico, and he said the United States could not defeat the Mexicans. He gave me a detailed story of how General Pershing had secured picked officers who were of a nervous temperament, so he could send them on duty and they would get into a scrape so he could start trouble. Pershing then found out that he would not be reinforced and stopped."

"Did the Chaplain ever say anything about this war being just or unjust?"

"Chaplain Feinler said this war was an unjust war. I gained the impression from this that he meant the Allies were unjustly treating Germany."

"Did you think he meant the United States was included?"

"Yes. The Chaplain said the United States should have maintained neutrality as well as proclaimed it."

Predicted German Victory.

"Did the accused ever say what would happen to the United States in this war?"

"The Chaplain replied that the only kind of peace would be a German peace as Germany controls the spoils of war. The United Stetes had gotten into a war which they had no business to get into and would meet the same fate as Rumania and Serbia."

"What impressions did you gain from the Chaplain's remarks?"

"That he was decidedly pro-German."

"Did the Chaplain ever express himself about the singing of war songs?"

"He said the men were singing a song called 'Hang the Kaiser,' which put the wrong spirit in the men going to the front."

Quartermaster Sergeant Frederick R. Shaw testified that Chaplain Feinler had handed him a copy of Senator La Follette's speech, instructing him not to let anyone know where it came from, as some people reading it might consider it pro-German.

"You have a pleasant home here," the Chaplain had said, according to the witness, "why break it up and go to France?"

To Mrs. Shaw he had said, so the witness testified: "I hope you will not be as foolish as your husband is and go to France."

Chaplain Feinler had stated, so the witness declared, that America troops were being sent over with only one rifle to a man, and many without rifles at all. The machine guns in use, he said, were entirely of French type; the Americans had no machine guns in France whatever.

Kept La Follette Speech as a "Keepsake."

Chaplain Feinler, testifying in his behalf, denied having uttered treasonable remarks, and said that some of the charges against him were "absolutely malicious." He denied ever having uttered insulting remarks about his superiors.

"I have the greatest admiration for the fighting spirit of the French," declared the Chaplain stoutly. "But it is no secret that the articles of war of France and America are much the same. I did not say that I was told this by French non-commissioned officers, but I did hear talk of this kind from soldiers of regiments who occasionally gave me their impressions."

The officer declared that the word "poor," in the phrase "poor German troops," and how the Belgian women poured water on them, was certainly added by those making the allegations. He referred in his lecture at the Y. M. C. A. to a Belgian lady in Tokio, who was quoted as saying, "How we poured hot water on those Germans."

"Why did you give out La Follette's speech to Sergeant Shaw?" he was asked.

"Because of his argument in regard to the questions about this war, reminding us of the injustice which we suffer from and which was held against us by the Germans, and also by the English."

"Why did you tell Sergeant Shaw not to tell where he got it from, or why did you tell him it might be considered pro-German?"

"I did not understand it that way."

"What was your idea in keeping the La Follette speech?"

"I think more as a keepsake than anything else—one of the documents to make up the library for future reference."

DR. HORNADAY HONORED.

Royal Society's Gold Medal Conferred on Him and Dr. Hewitt.

LONDON, March 14, (Associated Press.)—The gold medal of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has been conferred on Dr. William T. Hornaday of New York and Dr. Charles Gordon Hewitt of Ottawa, in recognition of their successful efforts in furthering the treaty between Canada and the United States for the protection of migratory birds.

W. H. Buckler, Special Attaché to the American Embassy, who received the medal on behalf of Dr. Hornaday, said:

"This war, which has shown us the value of aviation, has taught us also as never before the vital importance in relation to food supply of that most experienced of all aviators, the bird. Certain worms and grubs are the submarines of the countryside, while the bird is the airship patrol which detects and destroys these enemies. Birds are a precious international asset. The organized effort for their protection has been one of the chief public services which Dr. Hornaday has been performing for the last twenty years."

Bulgar Lines Heavily Shelled.

PARIS, April 14.—The War Office today issued the following concerning activities on the Macedonian front: "Eastern Theatre, April 13—Our artillery was active along the whole front, successfully carrying out methodical fires of destruction against the enemy batteries and organizations. In the course of the aerial fighting during the day two enemy airplanes were forced to make a landing."

STAFF OF MASSES ON TRIAL TODAY

Must Answer for Seditious Articles in Publication Now Suppressed.

CAMP WAITS FOR PHILLIPS

Young Pacifist, Once Let Go as an Undesirable Person, May Be Sent Back There.

Max Eastman, editor of the suppressed publication called The Masses; John Reed, the radical writer who was reported to have been named Bolshevist Consul General at New York; Floyd Bell, H. J. Glinterkamp, Josephine Bell, and Arthur Young, an artist, all of whom were concerned with the publication of or were contributors to The Masses, will go on trial in the Federal District Court this morning for violating the Espionage act. It will be the first trial in New York involving the publication of alleged seditious articles, and is expected to last most of the week. Eastman and the other defendants are accused of having entered into a conspiracy to obstruct recruiting and enlisting for the armed forces of the United States and for circulating a magazine containing articles "calculated and intended to induce persons liable to military service to refuse to submit to draft for service."

Charles Francis Phillips, the pacifist anti-selective draft agitator, who was sent away from Camp Upton by the military authorities as a person undesirable for the service, will probably find himself back at Camp Upton before the end of this week. The fact that the young pacifist, because he had been convicted of conspiring to defeat the purposes of the draft, was freed from military duty has not been approved by the War Department, and the Provost Marshal General has instructed the local draft officials that they have authority to entrain Phillips for Camp Upton without waiting specific instructions from Washington.

When Oscar Anderson, a member of the crew of the Norwegian steamship Bergensfjord, who was arrested some weeks ago charged with violating the Espionage Act, in smuggling into this country mail from Germany, appears for trial today in the United States District Court, Brooklyn, a mysterious letter, alleged to have been found in his possession, will probably be introduced in evidence. The Federal authorities are said to have discovered that the missive, an apparently innocent communication, contained a message written in invisible ink.

There have been reports that the letter was intended for a "prominent pro-German" here, and that the authorities were looking for another man in the case. Assistant United States District Attorney Charles Buchner, who is handling the matter, said last evening, however, that these rumors were based on mere supposition and that nothing affecting the identity of the person to whom the letter was addressed or the nature of its contents had been given out. Aside from this, Mr. Buchner would only say that there was a letter which would probably be submitted at the trial.

EIGHT ALIENS ARE ARRESTED

Six Men and Two Women Taken in Westchester Raid.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 14.—Six men and two women, all aliens, were rounded up early this morning by the emergency force of Sheriff Nossiter. They had been living in the same frame building on Peg Mountain where the Sheriff made a raid on Sunday morning last in which several cameras were found. The prisoners will be turned over to the Department of Justice in Manhattan tomorrow.

The Sheriff said all were well supplied with money and well dressed. They said they were "tourists" who were stopping at the place for a couple of days. No registration card was found on any, the Sheriff added. The prisoners, all of whom are about 30 years of age, gave their names as Louis Kukowitz, his wife Tessie, Austrians; William Herzenham, his wife Rosie, Paul Wittig, Max Krasnogowski, Herman Rudolph, Germans, and Frederick Schill, French.

DR. HIRSCH'S CRITICS APPLAUD HIS LOYALTY

Won By Sermon of Chicago Rabbi Answering Charges of Pro-Germanism.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 14.—Complete faith in President Wilson's liberalism, allegiance to the democracy of the American Government, a plea against war's hatred, and a yearning for peace based only upon justice, were themes which Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Sinai Temple molded into his sermon today as a response to members of his congregation who had openly cast doubt upon his Americanism. Anonymous letters had accused him of being pro-German.

The temple was crowded. After Dr. Hirsch ended his sermon there was a burst of applause. Members of the congregation arose en masse and rushed toward the platform to grasp his hand.

After directing his congregation through the verses of "America," Dr. Hirsch announced that $53,000 worth of Liberty bonds of the third loan had been bought at the door, and advocated further purchases of the bonds, which he characterized as a "privilege to the holder."

"Millions of young men now wearing the khaki, greater honor than which there is none, are exemplifying the duty of Judaism. The sacrifice of their lives is perpetual, knowing that by their sacrifice the nation lives. This nation has drawn the sword that other nations shall be free and self-governing.

"A religionist looks upon war as discipline God has willed. 'I know what war means, and I cannot preach the doctrine of hatred. Wish for the end of sin's dominion, but with mercy for the sinner. Throughout our determination to win, without quivering or shrinking, we shall not cherish hatred.

"To avow that the sword shall not be sheathed until every German man, woman, and child—as well as the German language—are dead is to strengthen the tenacity of our enemies and is incompatible with our high cause of liberty."

Reverting to his years in Germany, Dr. Hirsch drew an analogy relative to his status with an American who loves his country as a man loves his wife and will stand by her even against his mother.

"Our country drew its sword rightly against a Government which must be dethroned," he said. "Do you wonder that it took me a year to adjust myself to the fact that America unsheathed its sword justly? Those who mouth against their neighbors must remember how dangerous it is to toy with a man's reputation—an evil from which Jews have always suffered. Be charitable, lest from the grand patriotism, here shall spring a reign of terror, which God forfend."

"Dr. Hirsch has made his position clear. There can be no call for a resolution of approval. The demonstration after his address is itself a vote of confidence, while the applause, never before known within Sinai Temple, disperses every possible doubt and vindicates unequivocally the loyalty of Rabbi Hirsch."

GREGORY DENIES SPIES PUT GLASS IN FOOD

Says Department of Justice Has Found No Case of Malicious Tampering.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Attorney General Gregory sent a letter today to Congressman James A. Frear in which he stated that investigations by the Department of Justice showed there was little foundation for reports that German spies were putting ground glass in foodstuffs and poisoning court-plaster and water. The letter read:

"Hon. James A. Frear, House of Representatives:

"Sir—The Department of Justice has the honor to acknowledge your letter dated the 8th instant, in reference to statements in the press that efforts have been made by German spies in this country to injure our people by use of broken glass, poisoned court-plaster, poisoned waters, and other means.

"The department has received numerous complaints of the presence of broken glass in food substances, but a most thorough investigation has failed to establish a single case in which glass has been maliciously placed therein. The greater number of the alleged 'broken glass cases' developed into instances where there were found present small pieces of flint, sand or other impurities that had either accidentally or through negligent manufacture appeared in the products. There have been a few cases where glass did occur in such commodities, but in these instances the presence of the glass was due, as was the presence of other impurities just mentioned, to accident or to some negligence in the manufacture other than a willful intent to cause harm.

"As to poisoned court-plaster, a number of complaints have been made to the department and have been thoroughly investigated. In all of these cases but one no harmful trace of poison was found. In one case (occurring in Illinois) the investigation showed the presence in some court-plaster of tetanus germs, which the department is assured by chemists might occur in the negligent preparation of court-plaster, but even in this case there was no evidence of willful intent to place such germs in the court-plaster, and the inference was that they occurred through careless manufacture. The concern manufacturing the court-plaster was duly warned and has agreed to redouble its efforts to secure the production of an article free from injurious contents.

"No cases of poisoned waters with intent to injure human beings have come to the department's attention, either by complaint or by its own investigations. In a few instances complaints have been made or the department has heard that there might be poison in water intended for the use of horses or other animals belonging to or intended for the Federal Government or the Allies.

"Thorough investigation has shown all these complaints to be without foundation. The department has discovered no case where any attempt was made willfully to injure horses or animals belonging to or destined for Government use by means of poisoned water. There was found recently a small quantity of bichloride of mercury in a horse trough in West Virginia but there is as yet no evidence to show how this substance came there and no horses or other animals belonging to or destined for the use of the Government had access thereto. This matter is being thoroughly investigated.

"So far as the Federal Government is concerned, it would seem that the enactment of the pending Sabotage bill now before Congress would enable the prosecution of and the fixing of adequate punishment for such offenses as you describe against Government property, or property destined for the military or naval use of the Government. Respectfully,

"T. W. GREGORY,
"Attorney General."

LET PACKARD TRANSPORTATION BRING YOUR BUNDLES HOME

EVERY dollar the merchant spends to deliver your purchases is reflected in their cost to you.

There is parcel space aplenty in the Packard. Use it. National thrift is even more a matter of calculated efficiency than of conscientious self-denial. To go shopping in your car and not bring your parcels home is to put a needless burden on some other vehicle, and to help maintain the high cost of living when you might be doing your bit to reduce it.

To buy a motor car and use it in the thousand ways it can be used to reduce both your own and the national overhead is loyal service. Not to use it profitably is a sin. Join the growing army of those whose cars are dedicated to the service they alone can render towards the winning of the war.

Five Hundred Thousand American Soldiers in France

WE dare not delay the VICTORY now. American lives are at stake, our own safety, the safety of the whole world. If we are not to prolong the slaughter and the suffering, if we are not to risk defeat, or an inconclusive peace, we must act quickly; we must put forth our every effort now.

The army is doing its part. Five hundred thousand American soldiers are in France to-day. There will be more to-morrow. And more the day after. We are going to send an army large enough so that when we strike, with our Allies, we can drive the German hordes back across the Rhine—so that we can win the decisive VICTORY that will make American freedom safe, and establish a just and lasting peace.

But the whole nation must take part. Our armies in France are looking to us to furnish them, in ever greater abundance, the ordnance, the munitions, the supplies that will make their VICTORY possible. We must not fail them.

The Third Liberty Loan is our share in the winning of this war. Upon it depend the safety and success of five hundred thousand American soldiers in France.

PENNANT SEASON OF AMERICAN LEAGUE BEGINS IN EAST TODAY

SENATORS TO TEST HUGGINS'S NEW CLUB

Ray Caldwell and Walter Johnson Expected to Oppose Each Other in First Clash.

YANKS AN IMPROVED TEAM

The Addition of Pratt and Bodie Strengthens Fielding and Hitting of Local Outfit.

Miller Huggins and his renovated Yankees will make their 1918 debut against Washington at the national capital this afternoon, when Ray Caldwell, the best of the New York boxmen, will again match his flinging skill against the great Walter Johnson. This game and the Boston Red Sox-Athletics clash in Boston mark the opening of the championship season.

The Yanks were slated for their final tuning up game yesterday against the Boston Braves at Newark, but the game was called off because Weidmayer's Park was too muddy for safe base traveling. Then, too, there was so much sunshine that the players were not accustomed to, it might have been injurious to their eyes.

Official Washington is expected to turn out to the opening game today, which will be the first chance the national lawmakers have had for a little diversion for many months. Senators and Representatives are longing for a chance to give vent to their feelings, just as soon as Ping Bodie or some one else cracks the ball over the fence.

New York fans look for Huggins to accomplish something with the Yankees this Summer, because in the past there has been a general feeling that no manager has coaxed the Yankees to play the kind of baseball of which they are capable. The loss of Bob Shawkey and Ray Fisher has somewhat crippled the pitching staff, but in other departments the club has been improved. Baseball sharps believe that Huggins made a wise move when he landed Del Pratt for second base, because for several seasons past this has been the conspicuously weak point of the Yankees' inner works.

Pratt is not only an accomplished fielder and fast base runner, but he also brings much needed batting strength to the club, and his experience will have a balancing effect on the infield. The addition of Ping Bodie also boosts the hitting strength of the club considerably, and the Pacific Coast fence buster rounds out a collection of hard swingers, which also includes Frank Baker, Walter Pipp, and Roger Peckinpaugh. Even pitching such as Walter Johnson is expected to serve to the Yankees today will be endangered in the face of such batsmen.

The Yankees have already suffered from the draft, and before the season is very many weeks old there is danger of more players going to the national army. Already Shawkey, Fisher, Camp, an outfielder, and Smallwood, one of the most promising of the young pitchers, purchased last Fall, are in the service. Walter Pipp, Muddy Ruel, the catcher; Bob McGraw, and Ed Monroe, two of the young pitchers, are in Class 1A and may be called at any time. So Huggins starts his first year as an American League pilot none too secure in playing strength.

The Yankee manager expects that Marsans, the Cuban outfielder, will join the club within a few days. Marsans should improve the outfield, especially in hitting.

The probable lineup of the Yankees and Washington will be as follows:

YANKEES.	WASHINGTON.
Gilhooley, rf.	Shotten, lf.
Miller, lf.	Foster, 3b.
Pratt, 2b.	Milan, cf.
Pipp, 1b.	Rice, rf.

YOUNG OUTSHINES SPEAKER

Giants' New Star Outbats Cleveland Slugger on Southern Trip.

Manager McGraw and his troupe of Giants returned from their Southern training trip last night with all the players in excellent physical condition. The National League champions broke even in the series with Cleveland, each club winning three games, while one resulted in a tie.

The sensation of the training trip was Ross Young, the youthful Texan, who is Davey Robertson's successor in right field. Young beat Tris Speaker in the race for batting honors on the trip and finished with an average of .400. He made ten hits out of twenty-five times at the bat. Speaker's batting figure was .300. He made eight hits out of twenty-seven trips to the plate.

The Giants will have their final rehearsal for the season's opening at the Polo Grounds this afternoon, when they will play a double-header. The first game will be with Mr. Shonts's Interborough team and the other game will be played with the In-Er-Seals. During the afternoon's proceedings all the Giants on this season's bill of fare will be on exhibition.

The championship season will open at the Polo Grounds tomorrow at 3 o'clock against the Brooklyn Dodgers.

ADAMSON WINS FOR SCOTS.

New York Soccer Eleven Loses National League Match, 2 to 1.

Encountering the Scottish-Americans at Clark's Field in Newark yesterday, the New York Football Club sustained another defeat in the championship series of the National Football League by the score of 2 goals to 1. Honors were even in the first half, O'Halloran of New York scoring the first goal with a twenty-yard shot seventeen minutes from the start. H. Neill equalized from a pass by Hogan ten minutes later.

The New Yorkers played the latter part of the second half with only ten men, owing to the retirement of O'Halloran, but it was not until three minutes from the end that Adamson of the Scottish-Americans sent in a shot that hit the crossbar and turned in.

Playing a Metropolitan League game at Tatt's Oval yesterday, the La Sultana soccer eleven defeated Morse Dry Dock by 5 goals to 1. Duffy shot all three goals scored in the first half.

The Longfellows won hands down against the soccer team of the Prospect Football Club by the score of 7 goals to 1 at Taft's Oval, in Brooklyn, yesterday.

Two goals by McKenna on the left wing, one in the first period and the other in the second, gave a victory to Clan MacDuff's soccer team over the Interborough Rapid Transit eleven in the New York State League game at Lenox Oval by the score of 2 goals to 1 yesterday. McKenna's first effort came one minute from half time, when he dodged the defending right back and landed a beauty in the corner of the Interborough net. The clansmen held this advantage for the better part of the second half, until ten minutes from the end, when Brazulli equalized with a long shot. McKenna's winning goal came three minutes from the end.

The White Rose soccer eleven beat the Tyrconnell Celts by 7 goals to 3 in the cup tie game of the Southern New York Association contested in Astoria yesterday.

The Babcock & Wilcox soccer team defeated the Jersey A. C. in the New Jersey Association's cup tie by 3 goals to 0 at Bayonne yesterday.

DISCARD SPRING FOOTBALL.

College Athletes Too Busy with Other Sports Now.

Spring football practice, which has been a feature at nearly all of the larger colleges for many years, has been crowded off the athletic fields by military training. At Pennsylvania, Franklin Field is taken up so much during the afternoon with military training and baseball practice that there is no room for the football candidates to work, so Coach Bob Folwell has abandoned gridiron drill until next Fall.

There is also another reason why the football coaches do not find it necessary to hold Spring practice this year. Nearly every student in the colleges is taking up one sort of athletics or another and this general participation in sports, together with military training, has all the students in such fine physical shape that special training in football is not necessary.

Folwell, Penn's coach, is enthusiastic about the football outlook for next Fall. "Yale, Harvard, and Princeton will take up formal athletics again next Fall," says Folwell, "and this fact itself will do much to boost the game. Besides, at most of the other colleges the teams will not be much below the standard and there does not seem to be such a dearth of good material as was first imagined.

"At Penn, for instance, there are any number of fellows fresh from our prep schools who can jump into the game and give almost as good account of themselves as the lads who have gone to the front. Besides it is reasonably sure that at least one-quarter of last year's 'Varsity eleven will come back to college and with them as a nucleus, and the youngsters of last year's freshman team to fill up the gaps, there is no reason at all why the Penn eleven should not come through with as good a record as in previous seasons. A football star is born, not made, and for this reason alone, I predict that the game in general will not be hit very hard."

Sprinter Penn State Champion.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., April 14.—William H. Ganzemuller, Penn State's sprint champion, has been elected captain of the Blue and White track team. He succeeds Larry Shields, holder of State's half-mile and mile records, who withdrew from college to enter military service.

NOVICE OUTFOOTS RUNNERS OF BRONX

Schmid Easily Defeats Big Field in Weekly Handicap Five-Mile Road Race.

Amid scenes characteristic of war times Alfred Schmid, a novice road runner of the Pennant A. C., yesterday won his first road race. Schmid led home a pack of sixteen harriers in the weekly handicap road race of the Bronx Athletic League, held over the Pennant A. C.'s course of about five miles. Schmid was aided with a limit handicap allowance of four minutes, but he showed plenty of ability. His actual time was 27.55.

Schmid went to the front of the field right at the beginning. He set a stiff pace in the early stages of the race, but for more than two miles his rivals clung close to his heels. Gradually, however, the stamina of the leader told and he opened up a big gap. About the four-mile mark J. E. McLaughlin, St. Jerome's C. C., and Frank Caso, Pennant A. C., both of whom had started with lighter handicaps, came within threatening distance of Schmid, but the latter, increasing his pace, held his advantage to the finish. McLaughlin finished second, about 100 yards behind the leader, and Caso third.

Fast time laurels went to C. A. Holl, Hollywood Inn A. A., who started from scratch and finished seventh in 25:53. Close on his heels was J. McGuinness of the Mohawk A. C., the other scratch starter, whose time was 25:55.

Prior to the road race the Pennant A. C. held a flag raising ceremony, in which the service flag, containing forty-one stars, was flung to the breezes. Speeches were made by prominent officials.

Julius Katz, the club's leading cross-country runner, according to latest advices from the front, has been wounded in action. Katz is the first of the athletes of the local district to be injured in the war.

O'Connor, the scratch starter, accounted for the fastest time. He finished fifth, in 25:48.

Reilly has established a great reputation for himself in Eastern Pennsylvania by the record he has made with the Easton High School team.

CLAY BIRDS BAFFLE GUNNERS OF N. Y. A. C.

Large Field Takes Part in Weekly Event, but Few High Scores Are Made.

Thirty-five gunners, the largest field that has attended a Sunday shoot all season at the New York Athletic Club, were on the firing line at Travers Island yesterday. Although there was an excellent light, a high wind threw the bluerocks into difficult angles and as a result, not a single straight score was made. Dr. G. H. Martin was the high scratch gunner, with 92 breaks out of a possible 100. The high handicap gunner was R. B. Cole.

Full scores of 25 targets scored legs on the Monthly and the Tournament Cups. In the former event, the legs were taken by J. M. McLaughlin, W. C. Bowers, G. J. Corbett, D. S. McMahon, C. W. Berner, C. A. Brown, H. B. Reece, R. M. Owen, R. R. Owen and R. B. Cole. In the shoot for the Tournament Cup the legs were taken by J. M. McLaughlin, C. W. Derrick, C. W. Berner, W. R. Delehanty, A. G. Wilkes, Taylor, and H. B. Reece.

Three gunners scored legs in the Byronel Cup shoot. They all had full scores of 50 targets each. They were R. S. Smith, C. W. Berner, and R. B. Cole.

Blue-Blooded Filly Arrives.

Another Pebbles daughter has arrived at James Butler's East View Stud Farm, and this time the owner of the once great racing stallion is highly interested, since the bay filly is out of Climber, winner of the Debutante and other stakes in 1914. Mr. Butler is exceptionally interested in the get of Pebbles, as he believes that the son of Ben Brush and Running Stream should produce a host of speed marvels.

PLAN TRIBUTE TO SHERIDAN.

Washington Stadium May Be Named for Olympic Hero.

Friends of the late Martin J. Sheridan, former Olympic and National A. A. U. discus throwing and all-round champion, who gathered yesterday at the meeting of the Memorial Fund Committee in Murray's, to decide on plans for a memorial to the memory of the late athlete, unanimously adopted a resolution urging that the new athletic stadium, under construction in Washington, be named the Martin J. Sheridan Stadium. This, it was declared, would furnish a lasting memorial to the deeds of the once great Sheridan.

A committee was appointed and consists of Gustavus T. Kirby, First Vice President of the Public Schools Athletic League; John J. McHugh, Inspector of Athletics of the local Board of Education; Dock Commissioner Murray Hulbert, Supreme Court Justice Bartow S. Weeks, Robert Ford and E. J. Conway, President of the Irish-American A. C.

This plan has supplanted the suggestion to have placed in the stadium a pedestal or small monument of Sheridan throwing the discus, one of the original schemes outlined. If the movement to have the stadium named after the late athlete fails, then the committee will bend its efforts toward having the monument erected.

The plan to have the Irish-American A. C. conduct the Junior Metropolitan Association A. A. U. outdoor track and field championships at Celtic Park on Decoration Day, has been definitely abandoned. In place of these games there will be football matches, played under the auspices of the Gaelic Athletic Association. The matches at football will be between Kerry and Kilkenny, Galway and Waterford and Tipperary and Clare. The hurling match will be between Clare and Kilkenny.

ARRANGE GYMNASTIC MEET.

National Title Event to be Held Here April 27.

The National Amateur Athletic Union gymnastic championship competitions will be held April 27 at the West Side Y. M. C. A. The program will consist of eight individual tests and the all-around championship. H. Jorgensen, Norwegian Turn and A. C., is the present holder of the national all-around laurels, but it is doubtful if he will be able to defend. He was injured last week while preparing for the Metropolitan Association's championship tests, and has been advised by his physician to discontinue competition indefinitely.

Joseph Oessy, West Side Y. M. C. A., winner of the local all-around title, is expected to strive for the laurels of the national meeting. Peter Hoi, Norwegian Turn and A. C., who won the title two years ago, is another who is expected to enter the tournament. Ray H. W. Dutcher, national club swinging champion, and Arthur W. Nugent, National Turn Verein, holder of national trambling honors, are also expected to compete.

FRANCE CABLES FOR AMERICAN ATHLETES

Premier Clemenceau Asks Y. M. C. A. to Rush Directors to Instruct French Soldiers.

Premier Clemenceau has cabled the American Y. M. C. A. to rush athletic directors to France as soon as possible to teach the French soldiers mass athletics. The enthusiastic participation of the American troops in all sorts of sports has aroused the interest of the officers of the Allies, and both the French and the Italians are anxious to interest their soldiers in similar physical recreation.

Dr. George L. Fisher, who is supervising the recruiting of Y. M. C. A. athletic directors, said yesterday that the association was making a drive to recruit 130 former athletes at once to carry on the work in France among the American soldiers. It is also planned to send fifty athletes a month to the French and Italian forces. A large squad of athletes who are ready to sail will confer with Dr. Fisher this afternoon at Garden City.

The experience of the British in cultivating sports among their troops in the field has convinced the American, French and Italian commanders, it is said, that athletics should be regarded as a most important part of military training, and just as necessary for the morale and esprit de corps of a body of men as bayonet exercises or drills.

"This war is giving us an opportunity to make a nation of athletes," said Dr. Fisher. "What the army needs for victory is the mass consciousness and good, clean sports supply it. We have discovered that not only do the men in the trenches take to the major sports like football, soccer, baseball, wrestling and boxing, but group or mass games played in gymnasiums are very popular. Volley ball is in great demand. Thus we expect to give each soldier the benefit and pleasure of participation in such games so that, instead of creating 'champions' in this or that sport, we shall build them all up in vigor and agility.

"We contemplate organizations at 1,200 different points within the American lines in France where every soldier, away from the rigors of the trenches for breathing spells may recuperate by means of all the sports so dear to the heart of American youth. One hundred of our athletic directors are already at the front, and their work has met with the highest indorsement of United States Army commanders."

PIGEON RACES PLANNED.

Five Events to be Held by National Association.

The racing schedule of the United Homing Pigeon Concourse was revised at a meeting of the organization's committee Saturday night to conform with the permits to be issued by the chief signal officer of the War Department's Land Division for the coming season. The revised schedule was for the older birds. It was decided to eliminate one race from the original card, leaving five races for the pigeons. These will be the Wilmington 100-mile race, May 12; Washington 200-mile race, May 19; Charlottesville 300-mile race, May 26; Chatham 400-mile race, June 8, and Salisbury 500-mile race, June 22.

There were 300 representatives of twenty-one districts at the meeting. It was decided to make all races Concourse events, and it is expected that not less than 3,000 birds will participate in the five events. Especial interest is expected in the 500-mile race from Salisbury, N. C., to New York. This race is usually completed on the day the birds are liberated.

It was brought out at the meeting that the pigeon is also doing "its bit" in the war for democracy. The concourse has already supplied the Government with a great number of this year's birds, which are even now engaged in their task of bearing important messages from one point to another on the fighting front.

The peanut-brittle kind of promise is as easy to break as to make—and goodness knows there are enough of them.

RABBI REJECTS $1,000 FEE TO SING IN OPERA

HE IMPRESSED CAMPANINI

But Rev. Mr. Rosenblatt Feared Engagement Would Interfere with His Sacred Duties.

The Rev. Josef Rosenblatt, cantor of the First Hungarian Congregation Ohab Zedek at 18 West 116th Street, one of the most orthodox Jewish congregations in the city, has refused an offer of an engagement as a leading tenor with the Chicago Opera Company, with a salary of $1,000 a performance, because he did not think it right for him, as an orthodox Jew and cantor in a synagogue, to appear upon the operatic stage. The offer was made to Mr. Rosenblatt, he said yesterday at his home, 50 West 114th Street, by Cleofonte Campanini, General Director of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, after he had heard Mr. Rosenblatt sing several songs in Hebrew at a private concert in Chicago on March 13, while the rabbi was singing in Chicago for the benefit of the Jewish War Relief.

"Mr. Campanini came to me," Mr. Rosenblatt said, "after my concert and asked me to join the Chicago Opera Company, with a salary of $1,000 a performance. When I told him that I did not think it proper for me as an orthodox Jew to appear upon the operatic stage, Mr. Campanini said that he would guarantee that I need not remove my beard, nor sing in any performance on either Friday or Saturday, and that he would not ask me to sing any operas that would hurt the feelings of an orthodox Jew. In fact, Mr. Campanini said that he wanted me to play the part of Eleazar in 'The Jewess,' by Halevy, an opera highly laudatory of the Jews, in which Rosa Raisa would be the Jewess."

Mr. Rosenblatt said that he told Mr. Campanini that under these conditions he thought that there was nothing to prevent him from accepting the offer, but he asked for time to think it over, and under no conditions would he appear on the operatic stage against the wishes of his congregation. Mr. Campanini then sent the following letter to the Ohab Zedek Congregation:

Dear Sir: I heard Mr. Rosenblatt during his recent stay in Chicago and was so impressed with his voice and his art of singing that I made him an offer to sing, with the Chicago Grand Opera Company, the part of Eleazar in the opera "The Jewess," by Halevy.

I suppose the story of the opera is familiar to you. It is the glorification of the Jewish religion, and the role of the Jewess will be sung by Rosa Raisa, who is a Jewess, a native of Odessa.

I offered Mr. Rosenblatt three performances in Chicago with an option of an additional one in New York and an additional one in Boston, each to take place three weeks apart. He would have to be in Chicago only one week for rehearsals prior to the first performance. For all other performances he would only have to come to Chicago for each performance. His salary for each performance would be $1,000 and railroad fares to and from Chicago.

Mr. Rosenblatt personally has agreed to this proposition, under the condition that his congregation will allow him to accept. There will be no performance for him on Friday or Saturday, nor would he in any way have to take off or cut his beard, and there will be nothing in the performance or his appearance on the operatic stage that would in any way be a reflection upon the Orthodox Jewish faith. Mr. Rosenblatt has also given us the option on his services for the season of 1919-20.

I expect Mr. Rosenblatt to make a great success in opera, as he did in his concert appearance here.

Hoping to have a favorable answer at your early convenience, I am, yours very truly, CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI, General Director.

Upon his return to New York, after carefully considering the matter Mr. Rosenblatt said he felt that it would not be right for him to appear upon the operatic stage. Then, too, he said, he had to consider his congregation, and did not think it fair to leave it. Consequently, with the consent of Mr. Rosenblatt, Morris Newman, the President of the congregation, sent a letter to Mr. Campanini, in which he said:

"Your letter of March 21, in which you express your desire to have the services of the Rev. Mr. Rosenblatt for the Chicago grand opera, 'The Jewess,' was before our Board of Trustees. Our board agrees with you that there is no objection to this opera from a Jewish standpoint, but we feel that the Rev. Rosenblatt's sacred position in the synagogue does not permit him to enter the operatic stage.

"We have, however, no objections to his singing at concerts, whether sacred or otherwise. We are greatly pleased to learn that you were impressed with his voice and art of singing, and we wish to assure you that we regret most sincerely our inability to comply with your request in this instance.

"However, we hope that your future requests will be of a nature that they will meet with the entire approval of our Board of Trustees."

Mr. Rosenblatt was born near Kiev, Russia, and began singing when he was nine years old. Later he studied music at Pressburg, Austria, where he was known as "The Wonder Child," because of his ability. When he was eighteen years old, he became a cantor, singing first in synagogues in Hungary and later at the Israelit Synagogue Verband in Hamburg, Germany. Six years ago he was brought to New York by the Congregation Oheb Zedek.

IN MEMORY OF LINCOLN.

Services Mark Anniversary of Assassination.

In a patriotic service commemorating the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, held at Calvary M. E. Church, Seventh Avenue and 129th Street last night, tribute was paid to the Americans of today who, catching the spirit of Lincoln, have gone forth to fight for democracy. Mrs. Laura D. Prisk, President General of the Lincoln Legion for Democracy, and the mother of Flag Day, presided.

"Much attention is being paid to the long-range gun of the Hun," she said, "but the real long-range gun is that of America, reaching 3,000 miles to the battle line."

General George B. Loud of the G. A. R. described characteristics of Lincoln; the Rev. Dr. William H. Morgan, pastor of the church, spoke, and the audience saluted the Grand Army veterans present.

Today is the anniversary of Lincoln's death, and, in accordance with her custom, Mrs. Prisk will place a wreath on Lincoln's Statue in Union Square, in connection with patriotic services to be held there at 2:30.

Mukle-Harris Concert Pleases.

May Mukle, 'cellist, and George Harris, tenor, pleased a matinée audience at the Greenwich Village Theatre yesterday, both together in an air of Bach and Mr. Harris later in "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Miss Mukle introduced "Two Fancies" of her own, "Hamadryad" and "The Light Wind." In the evening there was a repetition of Japanese dances by Michio Itow.

Yvette Guilbert Heard Again.

Yvette Guilbert gave a supplemental recital to end her series at the Maxine Elliott Theatre last evening before an audience that had itself chosen her "request" program. Among the songs thus heard again were "La tiu," together with "Le Lien Serré," "La Femme," and "Le Voyage de Joseph et Maria à Bethlehem."

TRIBUTE TO WOMEN KILLED BY SUPERGUN

Mrs. Landon and Daughters, Murdered in Paris Church by Germans, Honored Here.

A memorial service was held yesterday at the Chapel of St. Martin of Tours in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine for Mrs. Mary Grinnell Landon, wife of Edward H. Landon, a retired lawyer of this city, and her daughters, Mrs. Lucy Landon Speed, wife of Captain Ralph Speed of the British Army, and Miss Ruth Landon, who were killed on Good Friday in a church in Paris by a shell from the long-range German gun. Dean W. L. Robbins, a relative of those who were killed, preached at the sermon.

"When death is met by those who have encountered it because of their loyalty to some high cause," said the Dean, "we have a moving and a very sacred name for it. We call it martyrdom. I feel that we have the right to use that word today in speaking of the noble women who were in Paris on Good Friday for reasons wholly loving and unselfish, whose work there was a ministry of compassion, and who met death there while they were in prayer. We think of their giving their lives in association with the great sacrifice which they were in church to commemorate. We think of them as faithful martyrs in a sacred cause.

"I said that the Landons were in Paris for reasons wholly loving and unselfish. They went at the outbreak of the war to be with Mrs. Landon's aged mother in a time of great anxiety and peril. They remained not only to care for her, but also to carry on work for the wounded soldiers in France. Mr. and Mrs. Landon were engaged in the work of the Red Cross. Lucy Speed and Ruth Landon were nurses in the American Hospital. Only yesterday I received a letter from one of their fellow-workers which gives so true a picture of their activities that I shall read extracts from it as their memorial:

"'May I tell you,' she writes, 'that during 1915 Miss Ruth Landon and her sister, Mrs. Speed, worked with me in Paris at the American Hospital? They devoted their entire time to helping to care for the wounded at the American Ambulance; every day at 8 o'clock they came in the wards and remained until 6 P. M. The work was very trying. Miss Ruth began her work in my ward, 239. She spoke French and translated English into French for both doctors and nurses, wrote letters for the wounded men and fed them, and although only a young girl she did more than many a mother could have done. The men called her grandmother, and today in France there are many hundreds who will grieve to know that this beautiful girl was murdered. Nearly four years of work, reading to the blind, taking them out and finding friends to help relieve their suffering, and all the hundred and one acts of kindness! There will be deep grief in many a home for their missing friend.'

"Their prayers and their gifts have gone up as a memorial to them, and now they have added the final gift of their lives. That is not death; that is translation. If our eyes were opened we should see it so. From lives of loving service they were caught up to a joyful immortality, caught up, like the Old Testament prophet, in a chariot of fire. And like him they have left behind them the mantle of their earthly service. They have left it for us to take up in the spirit in which they laid it down."

STOKES HITS SOCIALISTS.

Tells Church Congregation Why He Left the Party.

J. G. Phelps Stokes spoke last night to an audience that filled the Lenox Avenue Unitarian Church on the subject, "Why I Left the Socialist Party." The speaker was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Merle St. Croix Wright, pastor of the church.

"When Socialists here said to our Government, 'Keep your hands off,'" Mr. Stokes said, "when it declared war on the military caste which ruled for the love of ruling without regard for the liberties of others, it was the most craven thing ever known in an organized body. Some of the leaders in the Socialist Party had determined that the United States should not enter the war. They said it was unjust and they criticised the President's statement as to the humanitarian motive as cant and hypocrisy."

The speaker then said that when this was passed by a convention and overwhelmingly carried he "was forced out by an act too base to tolerate." He referred to certain Socialist leaders as a "narrow ring," who sought to rule the party without taking into their confidence the rank and file. Before this small group took this position against war there were 125,000 members of the party. Their action, he said, reduced the number to 60,000, and because the St. Louis crowds played false to the cause of humanity the Socialist Party ceased to merit the support of more than half its membership.

Mr. Stokes said the new National Party was more democratic than the Socialist Party, and was particularly strong in the Western States. He predicted members of Congress from the National Party at the next election.

Some Socialist Party advocates in the audience asked a number of questions of Mr. Stokes and some disputed several statements he had made. Two men with a German accent asserted he was wrong in saying the Socialist Party has only 60,000 members, declaring it has 81,000.

SHE IS NANCY SHANKS.

Circus Names Its Baby Giraffe—Big Loan Parade Today.

A celebration was held in Madison Square Garden last night on the occasion of the naming of the baby giraffe which is the menagerie feature of the 1918 circus season. The long legged and even longer necked little animal was named Nancy Shanks.

This morning the first Barnum & Bailey parade seen in the streets of New York in years will start from the Garden at 10 o'clock to aid the Liberty Loan, the route being up Fifth Avenue from Twenty-seventh to Fifty-eighth Street, returning to the Garden south through Madison Avenue.

Tomorrow morning the annual performance given each year to the orphan children of New York will take place.

Wallet Turned In by Suspected Man

Sergeant Patrick McManus of the United States Army, returning from Atlanta after a trip with prisoners from New Haven, Conn., reported to the Newark police that his wallet containing more than $700 had been stolen from under his pillow on a Pennsylvania train. He gave the police the name of a soldier he suspected. A few hours later the Newark police were notified that the wallet had been turned in at the lost and found department at Thirty-fourth Street, New York, by a soldier who said he found it on the train. The soldier was the one McManus suspected.

Burst Pipe at Sherry's Injures Two.

A fireman and a plumber employed at Sherry's, Forty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, were severely scalded yesterday evening when a hot-water pipe in the boiler room burst and poured a stream into the furnace. The furnace belched out a cloud of steam and hot coals that knocked the men down. Both were taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Michael McHugh, 216 East Forty-fifth Street, the plumber, was severely burned. The fireman, Patrick Cahill, 201 East Forty-fourth Street, was overcome by the steam.

MRS. RINEHART'S 'K' SHOWN ON SCREEN

"The Doctor and the Woman" Is Well Done by Mildred Harris.

CHAPLIN IN "A DOG'S LIFE"

Elsie Ferguson Presents Henry Arthur Jones's "The Lie"—New War Views.

There is nothing unusual about this week's new films at the leading motion picture theatres, but those who like "the movies" as ordinarily presented and popularly received may find something to their taste at the Rivoli, where they will find a rather liberal translation for the screen of Henry Arthur Jones's "The Lie," with Elsie Ferguson as the star, or at the Broadway, where Mildred Harris appears in a photodramatization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K," entitled "The Doctor and the Woman," or at the Strand, where there is a double anniversary bill, including Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" and Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark," or at the Rialto, where "Unclaimed Goods," with Vivian Martin in the leading rôle, is the feature.

Much of the dramatic power of "The Lie" as produced on the stage is lost in the screen version, chiefly, no doubt, because the play does not lend itself to motion picture interpretation; but, also, the unnecessary deviations in the scenario from the original work do not seem to strengthen the result. Miss Ferguson, however, makes the most of her character and is well supported.

For many the most interesting part of the Rivoli's bill this week is the set of Italian war pictures, which show the amazing difficulties and unusual character of the fighting in the mountains, and many Alpine scenes in themselves well worth recording by a camera are included.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are entertaining in a comedy entitled "A Youthful Affair," and the appearance with them of Bobby Connelly adds to the amusement of their piece. The Rivoli Orchestra is assisted by Annie Rosner, Elizabeth Starr, the Rialto Male Quartet, and Jeanne Gordon in furnishing excellent musical numbers.

"The Doctor and the Woman" is the story of the mysterious K, who won the hearts of many of those in a town into which he drifted anonymously and remained just some one whom everybody loved until the life of a man depended upon the performance of a certain difficult operation. Then K was revealed as the doctor who had originally discovered the operation, but who, because he had lost his grip on himself, had disappeared from the world in which he was a celebrity, and sought shelter in the little town. The dying man was his successful rival for the love of Sidney Page, and K knew him to be unworthy of the girl, but, overcoming personal feelings, he performed the operation and saved the man, because that was what the girl wanted. Sidney Page, however, discovered the character of her affianced, gave him back his ring, and found that she had loved K all of the time.

Charlie Chaplin, at the Strand, is Charlie Chaplin. Thousands know him and like him and will see him this week. "The Face in the Dark," by Irvin S. Cobb, is a melodramatic mystery story, which, like many such pieces, has moments of surprise and thrill, but, when final revelation comes, is seen to be weak in logical development. Many things occur which can be explained only as the result of the author's deliberate intention to lead the spectators astray and prepare them for a complete surprise at the end.

A master in the art of writing such stories as "The Face in the Dark" mystifies one completely, and yet at the end all of the incidents of his work are seen to be related logically to the whole.

The Strand Symphony Orchestra plays the "Rumanian Poem," by Georges Enescu; Dorothy South, soprano, sings "The Star" and "Love is Best of All," and Rosa Lind and Giovanni Cammello sing the finale of Act I. from "Madame Butterfly."

In addition to "Unclaimed Goods," which is about the adventures, humorous and exciting, of a girl who was shipped by express, the Rialto program includes music by the theatre's orchestra, Greek Evans, Gloria Gale, and the Rialto Chorus. Happy Hooligan appears in motion, and scenes of a trip through Glacier National Park are shown.

HIPPODROME ANNIVERSARY.

Thirteenth Year Celebrated with Special Performance.

The Hippodrome, being thirteen years old, celebrated the fact last night with an interesting program, which had exhibitions by the various branches of the service as its principal features. A brisk working-out by a detachment of men from Camp Dix, under the command of Colonel W. C. Johnson, appeared to interest the huge audience the most, but drills by the marines and 700 naval recruits from Pelham Bay also were received with high approval. An unadvertised novelty was a brief exhibition by the Women's Motor Corps.

From the Hippodrome standpoint the sentimental event of the evening was the singing of the old Hippodrome songs, the hits of former years, by Nanette Flack, Belle Story, and Sybil Vane. The fearless Houdini capped the evening's entertainment shortly before midnight with an escape in thirty-five seconds from a "restraint suit," into which he was strapped by men from the United States Tank Corps, and the others on the program included Riccardo Martin, Francesca Peralta, Julia Arthur, Rose Coghlan, and the Six Brown Brothers. R. H. Burnside and Leo Carrillo divided the labor of the master of ceremonies.

Portions of the evening's receipts went to the army and the navy, and considerable revenue was derived from the sale of programs by the Stage Women's War Relief.

TOSCHA SEIDEL PLAYS.

The latest of the violinists who have come out of Russia made a late-season entry into New York's musical colony, now the melting pot of the artistic world, at a thronged recital yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The début here of Toscha Seidel, another of the companions of Heifetz in Petrograd, and the one who came overseas with the master, Auer, commanded attention on a day when fine outdoor weather emptied most other halls. Seidel's audience not only heard his long program through, but remained afterward till he played four encores, and cheered him loudly at the end.

Mr. Seidel made a popular success, for he has the quality described as "heart" in his music, the gift of strong individuality and personal appeal in his playing. Of higher elements, the flawless technique, the purity of style, he is not always a master, but he has the poet's vision. He drags out a theme, tarrying over phrases with an amazing power of sustained legato, emphasizing to the utmost every possibility of varied expression. He is never in repose, never reserved, but always vital, throwing caution to the winds in a reckless dashing off of passages of precision, yet again pouring honeyed sweetness and warmth into high harmonics that others finish with a squeak.

From the Vitali chaconne, with which Heifetz also opened last October, he passed to the Tschaikowsky concerto, without orchestra, of course. A youth not yet 18, he was hardly taller as he stood on the stage than his big accompanist, Richard Hageman, sitting at the piano. He played one arrangement by Auer, that of Chopin's E-minor nocturne, with little pieces by Elgar, Sinding and Tor Aulin, and in conclusion, most admirably, Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs," given with fine racy fervor. Seidel can play false notes and still be interesting. At his best, among the Auer prodigies, he resembles Elman most of all.

Mr. Seidel was born in Odessa, Russia, Nov. 4, 1900, and as a child of 3 years is said to have been devoted to a toy violin. His mother, a school teacher and sensible woman, opposed the encouraging of a youthful prodigy, but at 7 years he was sent to a teacher, Max Fiedeman, and a year later, it appears, he played the De Beriot concerto with orchestra in public in Odessa.

His first teacher's brother, Alexander Fiedeman, took him to the Stern Conservatory in Berlin, where the Maecenas who bought him his first fine violin was the same Justice Stern who had once done as much for Marcella Sembrich. In 1912 the Fiedemans sent the boy to Leopold Auer, then at Dresden. Since then Seidel has studied and traveled with Auer, going in Winter to Petrograd, and in recent Summers to Norway.

Seidel appeared in 1915 at Christiania, playing on various occasions the concertos of Tschaikowsky, Lalo, Mendelssohn, and Saint-Saëns. Three tours of Scandinavian countries preceded the present journey of Seidel and his mother to America in the party that accompanied Professor Auer to New York.

STARS AID ITALIAN FUND.

Metropolitan's $17,000 House Cheers Caruso and Allied Hymns.

Italian stars of the Metropolitan sang to their greatest Sunday night audience in years, a house that counted up $17,000 at grand opera prices, in a gala benefit given last evening for Italian soldiers' families in the United States. As early as 4 o'clock in the afternoon two lines of standees reached from Broadway both ways around the theatre to Seventh Avenue, where the late comers joined in a clamoring mob that soon called out the police reserves. A considerable fraction of the 4,000 who got in at last had stood for eight hours when the great concert, prolonged by patriotic demonstrations and by many encores, finally came to a close at midnight with Italy's hymns of Mameli and Garibaldi, and Caruso singing in the chorus.

Caruso appeared three times in the program, each time greeted with an uproar of applause by many who never before heard the chief tenor on a Sunday night. After his "Pagliacci" air, he had to add as encores Costa's "Sonviene-tol" and Tosti's "Carmela." He sang with Scotti a duet from "Forza del Destino," the two men's voices blending until the house shouted back its "bravos" at them, and both were heard again with Alda and Sparkes in the third-act duet from "Bohème." Martinelli, Muzio, Amato, Alda, and De Luca had solo numbers, and Didur sang with Setti's chorus in the imposing prologue to "Mefistofele."

Italy's Ambassador, the Count di Cellere, with General Tozzi and Consul General Romolo Tritoni, occupied boxes decorated with flags, and ex-Justice Charles Evans Hughes, as President, represented the Italian-American Society. Midway in the concert the audience joined in singing national anthems of Italy, France, England, and America.

SUNDAY SHOW FOR SOLDIERS

"The Man Who Stayed Home" Played for Men Going Over There.

A performance of "The Man Who Stayed at Home" at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre last night, to which sailors and soldiers were admitted free of charge, proved a success of such proportions that it is expected that the experiment will be repeated from time to time with other plays. Actors, stagehands, and practically all persons connected with the play and the theatre contributed their services at last night's performance, the total cost of the production being $5.75. The performance took the place of the customary free vaudeville program at the Playhouse on Sunday night.

Uniformed men began to assemble in front of the theatre at 7 o'clock, and the play was given to an audience which stood six deep in the rear of the auditorium. More than a thousand men had to be turned away.

The next play to be similarly produced for men in uniform will be "The Man Who Came Back," which will be acted at the Playhouse a week from Sunday by one of the touring companies.

France Woodmansee, New Pianist.

France Woodmansee, a pianist of agreeable qualities, appeared for the first time at the Punch and Judy Theatre yesterday afternoon, as he has before now in the West and also in Europe, as a protégé of Gabrilowitsch. He played with Michael Penha, 'cellist, the sonata of Saint-Saëns in C minor, with earlier solo pieces of Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, and a final group by Debussy.

Aurelio Giorni Goes to War.

Aurelio Giorni, a pianist already heard here, gave a last recital in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon before answering a call of the Italian Government to service in the war. He is to leave at once for Washington to report to the embassy there. In a program of two composers, he presented a variety of Schubert's song-like "Impromptus" and Chopin études.

Grace Had Not Spent Pay Collected Two Weeks Ago.

The Newark police have notified relatives of Richard Grace, a machinist, employed at the Port Newark shipyards, of his sudden death from apoplexy in a furnished room house at 38 Mulberry Street, Saturday night. In Grace's pockets were found bankbooks showing deposits of nearly $20,000, extending over nearly a score of years.

Mrs. Nellie Schroeder, who runs the house, told the police that Grace, a man of 42, came to her place two weeks ago and asked for the cheapest room she had. In the bankbooks was a pay envelope dated two weeks ago, containing $42, a week's pay. Grace leaves a sister, Edith, and a brother, James E., at Whitensville, Mass.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1918.

DO IT NOW.

Subscribing to the Liberty Loan should not be left to the last moment. What is wanted is not the taking of the issue by a few, but by the many. It is desired to have so many million subscribers that the mere recital of their numbers will give confidence in us to our allies, and be assurance of America's determination, not of the determination of a certain percentage of Americans. As many subscribers as possible, not merely the subscription of the whole amount, that is the object. But the more subscribers the Government seeks the bigger and longer becomes the task, and therefore the man who does most to help the Government is the man who shortens it by getting his subscription in early.

The fate of the world is being weighed in smaller scales every day. The future depends, at this moment, not on a great number of campaigns being fought in many quarters of the globe, but on the narrow question whether the troops now engaged in Flanders and Picardy can hurl the Germans back or must themselves succumb. In such a terrific hour as this the question is not whether a patriotic American should subscribe to his country's war expenses or not, for that question is not to be argued. It is whether he should give his answer so quickly that it will be heard in Flanders and in Picardy. This loan will be taken, but it should be taken with a rush, and the sound of the rush should be heard on the firing line.

HOLLAND AND HER SHIPS.

The people of Holland must see that in all probability there would have been no food riots in their cities last week if their Government, yielding to threats from Germany, had not withdrawn from the agreement of Jan. 25 with the United States. In compliance with the terms of that agreement, ships loaded with grain and other foodstuffs were ready here two months ago to start for their ports. The course taken by the Dutch Government, under German pressure, has deprived them temporarily of the 100,000 tons of food which we had undertaken to send, in return for a loan of their ships for ninety days. It should be clear to them that German threats have caused the shortage of food supplies. And now, although the agreement was broken, it is our purpose to stand by the terms of it which related to food, and several cargoes of grain will be forwarded without delay. If German submarines sink the ships, our Government cannot justly be blamed for such losses.

The Dutch Government's published protest against the seizure of Dutch ships at American ports was not sent to our Government as an official note, but probably was designed to serve the interests of Holland at Berlin. It is difficult to see how this can be the effect of it, for Germany knows that the terms of the January agreement—which caused the threats of submarine attack—had not only been approved by Holland, but were originally proposed by her. This has been shown by the War Trade Board and in Secretary Lansing's reply to the Dutch protest. The ships that have been seized had been lying at our ports for more than seven months, where the cost of their maintenance in idleness had exceeded $30,000,000. Many were loaded with grain which was needed for ourselves and our allies. Nor could we spare the bunker coal without which they were unable to cross the ocean. Owing to submarine warfare, pronounced illegal by Holland, there was a shortage of carriers. We might have taken these ships long ago, in accord with provisions of international law, but we desired to avoid such action and began negotiations for an agreement, which was completed in January. As has been said, the terms had been proposed by Holland. But the agreement was made ineffective when Germany's threats were permitted, as Secretary Lansing says, to "overrule "the will of the Netherlands Govern-"ment expressed therein," and vessels that had sailed for service were recalled. Then our Government took the ships and began to use them.

In this there has been no violation of international law. Nor is the act inconsistent with that "traditional friendship" of which Holland speaks in the complaint. Owners of ships that were idle are now well paid for service. Vessels surviving at the end of the war will be returned in good condition. A fair price will be given for those lost, or they will be replaced. And all the supplies named in the broken January compact will be granted. Although Holland has sixty ships in idleness at Rotterdam, we are not waiting for any of these, but are sending food on those which we control. The Dutch people will admit that the friendship of Americans is not like that of Germans, who have sunk more than 150 of their ships, many of them in waters called "safe," and whose gunboats, after getting repairs and provisions at Dutch ports, go out and shell fishermen's boats along the coast.

STILL FAR FROM THE GOAL.

The German object from the first was the Channel ports, according to the plan of campaign as given in the diary of a German officer which we publish today. The aim was to reach "Boulogne, Abbeville, &c." The first attack, that on the Somme, was so successful that the officer, so soon to die in battle, mourned over the probability that his division would not have a chance to get into it. He writes:

> The preparations have been so thoughtfully planned that failure is almost an impossibility. In spite of all this, if it should happen that the attack is held up at one point, it will be immediately broken off there and the troops moved to another sector.

That is precisely what happened, and it happened at least twice. The first attack, below Arras, was succeeded by the shift to a frontal attack on Arras, and that in turn by the attack in Flanders, now going on. This leaves out of account the attack on the French, which was evidently a side issue and not an integral part of the campaign. The Germans expected to break through in the first of their attacks, and considered "failure almost an impossibility"; but they did fail, and they have twice had to resort to the plan which they had in reserve in case of that impossibility happening.

Great as their progress has been, it is difficult to see where they can move next with any hope of achieving their great object unless they can break the British line either to the north or the south of their present wedge. They cannot keep on pushing westward and lengthening that wedge. To the north and south they are confronted by heights, and these heights increase the further they go. If they can break through and surmount these heights, either to the north or the south, they can reach level country and resume their grand operation. It is there, however, that the British stand with, as Marshal Haig said, their "backs to the wall."

STATE RIGHTS DEMOCRATS.

It "sounds like stories from the land of spirits," but there are State rights Democrats left on earth. There has been a meeting of Alabama Democrats who have revived that obsolete and pernicious doctrine, for the wicked present purpose of obstructing the ratification of the prohibition amendment. There was much talk of "Federalists." The ghosts of John Randolph and his "old Republicans," the straitest sect of strict constructionists, may well have walked at that assemblage in Montgomery of ancients not ashamed to babble about "local self-government" and "the police powers of the State," as if the Federal Government wouldn't swallow them all.

The curious thing about the new "Federalists" or "Nationalists" is that so many of them are Democrats. A Democratic Congress sends Alabama and the other States that amendment which stirs such mutiny and rage. "They send William Jennings Bryan," said former Governor O'Neal, "to tell us that State rights died with the saloons." And Governor Patterson of Tennessee "says he foresees Government in "which State lines will be absolutely "abolished." "How long will it be," wrote Senator Underwood, "before "we shall be compelled to face "proposals to administer our local "affairs in relation to all matters "affecting the qualifications of vot-"ers, the selection of local officers, "the powers to control the levy and "collection of State and county "taxes, and the control of all in-"dustrial and labor problems by the "Government of the United States?"

How long, indeed? When so many Democrats are more Hamiltonian than Hamilton, when they miss no chance to add to the overgrown powers of the central Government, who could blame the Republicans if they should seek to regulate Federal elections in the Southern States? If "white supremacy" and local self-government are threatened at any time in the South, whose fault will it be? The fault of Democrats who have forgotten or renounced the historic and cardinal doctrines of the Democratic Party.

It is good, if a little surprising, to find in Alabama or anywhere else Democrats of ability and distinction who remember the old faith and strive stoutly to resist the ultimate ruin of State government, and the immediate imposition of the prohibition amendment by the Anti-Saloon League and all the pragmatical busybodies who have bulldozed Congress and are now seeking to bulldoze the State Legislatures.

Yet it will not do to be of too good hope as to the triumph of common sense and the survival of a modicum of State rights. Prohibition appeals to the love of office. Think of the incredible number of pincemen that will be needed to enforce national prohibition, unless that can be reinforced by an effective prohibition of fermentation. It is said that the United States Internal Revenue officers smash every year over 3,000 moonlight stills. Imagine the large radiance of the wet moon when prohibition makes prodigious the gains of the distillers of contraband strong drink! Imagine the hordes of Federal locusts that will devour the land!

DOUBTS ABOUT PIE.

Has the United States Food Administration, have the students of wheat conservation, have the wheatless hotels and eating houses miscellaneous and innumerable, ever pondered pie as it should be pondered? Pie is a universal American cate. Light or leaden, it makes its way into most stomachs. It has been the nurse of the strong, of heroic virtues. Few agents have been more potent than pie in promoting the survival of the physically toughest.

Good or bad, pie pervades the land. It is reckonable in millions. Its upper crust, if it be not open—and the majority is not—its lower crust, are made so far as the lay cook mind knows, of wheat, only of wheat. Irrespective of the oceans of butter, lard, beef fat, that "shorten" the universal, monstrous, unthinkable daily American consumption of pie, gigantic must be the mountain of wheat for its crusts.

How about pie? Is this wheat-eater to continue in good and regular standing as a food? Can its crusts be made of something else than wheat? Or, beloved—and often venerable—as it is, shall not wheatful pie be taboo?

WHEN CAREY STOPPED THE GAP.

The more we hear about Brig. Gen. Sandeman Carey and the scratch force which he picked up from nowhere to stop the German host, the more certain it appears that this is one of those occurrences which happen once or twice in each great war and keep poets and painters and orators busy for a good many years afterward. There was nothing between the Germans and Amiens except Carey, at that point, and he had to improvise something more. By telephone, by messenger, by flag signals, he got hold of everybody around; labor battalions, "sturdy middle-aged men," electricians and signalers, members of "an infantry training school near by," machine gunners hurriedly armed with rifles, engineers, and "fifty cavalrymen to do a little scouting." With this force Carey stopped the gap in the British line for nearly six days. He improvised a staff as he went on, "of-"ficers learning the ground by having "to defend it and every man from "enlisted man to Brigadier jumping "at each job as it came along."

There is something of peculiar interest to Americans in this. Early in the fight there were references in the British reports to "Americans fight-"ing shoulder to shoulder with the "French and British." No American force was identified as in the fight, and not until several days after did Pershing begin to send reinforcements to the Allies. The Americans referred to so mysteriously were part of that strangely mixed force that Carey drummed up from the void. They were engineers, who at Carey's call picked up rifles and merged themselves in his motley corps without orders from anybody. It was the same thing that happened at Cambrai. They were not many, but in view of the unmistakable fact that history will never tell the story of the battle of Picardy without telling the story of the place where Carey fought, it is mighty comforting to know that the Yankees were there. It is perhaps only luck, but at Cambrai and on the Luce the engineers have won from the marines the right to the motto, "First to fight."

The middle-aged man, who has been feeling a little out of sorts since this war began, elbowed as he has been into a corner, had his innings on the Luce, if he never does again. Those labor battalions, past the fighting age in theory, were among the men who stopped the gap on the Luce and saved the British Army, who kept Hindenburg out of Amiens and perhaps out of Paris; "strong as "oxen and mighty bruisers at close "quarters," records the correspondent. It is a little ironical; not good enough for ordinary fighting, on them was unexpectedly laid the burden of extraordinary fighting. Not good enough for a skirmish, they were good enough to hold the bridge like Horatius; they were good enough for Thermopylae. The middle-aged man everywhere may throw out his chest a little; Mars has taken a moment to vindicate him.

There is something old-fashioned about that picture of Carey himself, "careless of danger," riding along the hastily made lines "giving an "order here and shouting a word of "encouragement there to his weary "and hard-pressed men." We have read so much about Generals sitting at a telephone five miles off that we had begun to think there would never be any Waynes and Washingtons again. Carey not only stopped the gap on the road to Amiens, but, with his middle-aged laborers turned volunteers, his gunners armed with rifles, and his own cheery gallops down the lines, he for a moment made this glaringly unnatural war seem normal again.

SERBIA.

The statement is made by Mr. Dushan Popovitch, General Secretary of the Serbian Labor Party, that "conditions in Serbia are worse than "in Belgium, worse than in occupied "Polish provinces, worse than in oc-"cupied Rumania."

Mr. Popovitch is the author, with Mr. Katslerovich, a Serbian Deputy, of an account of the state of Serbia after its German conquerors, sated with plunder, made way for their congenial rivals in the arts of looting and cruelty, the Austrians and the Bulgarians. These two Serbian writers lived in Serbia, saw with their eyes many of the events of two years which they record. Serbia was treated as another Belgium. Some 150,000 men were carried off and interned in Austria-Hungary, in Bulgaria, in Asia Minor, whither the Bulgarians, so beloved and revered in the United States on account of Robert College, drove a lot of families of East Serbia, which they are making Bulgar by the approved Bulgarian method.

We don't know how many of these conscript settlers in Asia Minor have died. According to Mr. Katslerovich and Mr. Popovitch, some 30 per cent. of the Serbians in internment camps of Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary had died when the account was written. The Bulgarians are said to have killed 20,000 Serbs in the insurrection of a year ago in March.

Used to epidemic and murder, Serbians probably find a noble clemency in the whippings which the Bulgarians love to give them. Of war, famine, disease, depopulation in Serbia, who has not read? The deportations and internments exhausted most of what was left of labor supply. The tools and carts and cattle of the farmers—it is a nation of peasants—and all the industrial machinery were lugged out of the country. A thorough robbery on the best German model. "A country where "the only surviving creatures" are "women, children, and old men." They "live in most terrible misery. "There is no working or producing "power. The possibility of earning "money does not exist; there is no "money to buy anything, no articles "to be bought."

These things should be kept in mind. They are part of that immeasurable, deliberate ruin which Germany and her accomplices have brought. They are part of the plan of German domination of the world.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

He Relies on Poor Authority.

For reasons not quite as mysterious as most of the phenomena presented by anti-vivisection and the anti-vivisectionists, one Claude M. Spaulding, seemingly a high official in the national association of people who value guinea pigs above human babies, and white mice above American soldiers fighting in France, was displeased by recent remarks in this column about the withdrawal by the Red Cross of the money it had appropriated for biological research. (The word "seemingly" has been used, not because of much doubt that Mr. Spaulding is the Treasurer of the National Anti-Vivisection Federation, as its letterhead declares, but because experience has taught the large possibility of—well, call it "error," in any statement from that source.) He is, indeed, more than displeased; he is angry, and, as too often happens with men who write or speak in that state, he has expressed in terms decidedly abusive his opinion of The Times's gently expressed dissatisfaction with the yielding by the Red Cross to anti-vivisection pressure.

To back up his letter, and presumably in expectation of compelling a complete reversal of position taken by us, he appends to it a long editorial article clipped from The Christian Science Monitor, the paper that prints dispatches charging that our army surgeons, in order that the manufacturers of serums may grow rich, are murdering our soldiers by wholesale under pretense of protecting them from typhoid. As the article contains only the contradictions of established facts long since made familiar by anti-vivisection literature, it would be as much a waste of space to repeat them as it would be of time to give them any further consideration.

Mr. Spaulding will have to quote some other authority than the organ of Eddyism if he wants to change the views of The Times in regard to what he and his kind are so fond of calling vivisection or to the course of the Red Cross in allowing its action to be determined in a very important matter by the shrieks of sufferers from the zoophil-psychosis. All he need do to effect that purpose is to get General Gorgas and his subordinates to admit that they are a gang of venal assassins, or the medical profession to confess that no good to humanity has come from animal experimentation. Till then The Times will remain convinced that what the Red Cross did in this matter was about as wrong as wrong could be.

Economy, Real and Other.

For bringing about what it calls the reorganization of New York's Board of Health there has been raised by the ingenious agents of our Municipal Administration the question of legality with respect to all but two of the board's subsidiary or auxiliary bureaus. So more than dubiously correct, however, is the contention of illegality that all emphasis has been placed on the saving of money that would be effected if the bureaus under attack were abolished. That is an argument sure to appeal to the city's hard-pressed taxpayers, and, of course, economy in the expenditure of public funds is always admirable.

The Mayor and his supporters in this movement are, therefore, wise to keep attention fixed as much as possible on that one point, only diverting it now and then to "experts," a word which, when pronounced in just the right tone, always makes the folk specializing in the "practical" see red. But not all taxpayers are or can be blinded to the fact that in the saving, or rather, in the not spending, of money there is sometimes loss, not gain. More than a few of them are able easily to see that for the city to let its death rate go up in order to save money would be about as sensible, about as truly economical, as it would be for a man to decrease his tailor bills by cutting off his legs and arms.

In both cases the saving undoubtedly can be effected, and in both the process could be carried still further in the same way—the city by abolishing its Health Board altogether and the man by committing suicide—but neither expedient really commends itself to the more thoughtful and intelligent element of the metropolitan population.

The real question as regards all of the Health Board bureaus now under investigation is not whether their suppression would decrease immediate municipal expenditures, but whether the results the bureaus produce are worth what those results cost. And that is not to be settled by what anybody thinks or believes. Facts, statistical and comparative, are available, authoritative, and abundant. They prove beyond contradiction that the thing to do, if it be true that the statute does not warrant their establishment, is not to abolish the bureaus, but to amend the statute.

Canadians Talk of Titles.

Canadian papers seem to be content to let the members of the Dominion's House of Commons monopolize the feeling and expressing of excited antagonism to the award of titles to the variously eminent personages who know how to get them and are willing to take the required trouble. The legislators want the practice not altogether stopped, indeed, but the number of its beneficiaries much diminished. They also profess an estimable desire that honorifics should be granted with more discretion, as well as less lavishly.

Viewed from across the border, the implication contained in that wish is that hitherto an occasional Canadian has had "Lord" or "Sir" tacked to his name for reasons not very clearly or closely connected with distinguished public service. It is painful to believe that, but the fervor with which our neighbors play politics is well known, and so is the fact that their politicians know and use about all the forms of "influence" familiar to their American brothers.

What the Dominion lower house asked the home Government to do was to put an end as soon as possible to hereditary Canadian titles, as utterly incongruous with the spirit of Canadian institutions, and to grant the minor honors only with the approval or on the advice of the Prime Minister of Canada. Both proposals seem sensible enough, but that the subject receives any attention at all is a little surprising—it almost reminds one of what the Russian statesmen did the other day when they devoted their mighty minds to finding a suitable inscription to put on their flag.

In both cases time could have been more profitably employed, one would think.

A Disclosure Hard to Understand.

One of the official war dispatches from Berlin makes the statement that 300 French prisoners taken in the fighting west of Moreuil were subsequently killed by shells from the French cannon. Why this revelation should have been made is decidedly mysterious. It could not have been with any notion that for such a reason the French would cease to bombard the German lines, and of anybody else than Germans it would naturally be expected, if they did disclose such a slaughter of prisoners, care would be taken to explain just why it was that the protection demanded by the laws of war could not be given to them in this particular instance.

A theory of the disclosure far from incredible is that the purpose of the announcement was simply to create for French minds an additional horror or pain—that it was merely a new phase of "Schrecklichkeit," devised under the apparently irremediable German delusion that thus the enemies of Germany can be frightened and disheartened.

That would go well with the Kaiser's congratulations to the inventor of a gun that kills people worshipping in church on Good Friday and is similarly effective against the mothers and babies and nurses in a maternity hospital.

VOLUNTEER NURSES.

A Call Here, as Abroad, Will Bring Forward the Women Needed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Much has been written and said as to shortage of nurses, with some hints as to drafting our young women into the service. Why should it be taken for granted that our girls are less patriotic than the English and French? Have not the military hospitals in both those countries been overrun with requests from young women to enter as probationers, to perform any service demanded of them? I served for a year in the military hospitals in England as a "sister."

In one, of over 200 beds, we had some thirty-odd young girls between 18 and 25 as probationers, mostly from the so-called "honorables" and upper middle class, many having never made a bed or boiled an egg before they came to us, but their work I have not seen excelled by any probationers.

In a London hospital of over 150 beds we had girls and women from the Voluntary Aid Detachment, working in two shifts. The staff consisted of matron, four graduated nurses, or sisters, two partly trained nurses, no house surgeon, but three visiting. In my own ward of twenty-five beds, which had formerly been the drawing room and library of a very handsome house, my assistants were one partly trained nurse and two young girls of the Voluntary Aid Detachment. These last kept wards and laboratories in beautiful order, assisted with dressings, and were always ready to help with entertainments. The men's surgical is always the easiest ward in every hospital, and a favorite with nurses.

When the need arises for more nurses in our military hospitals the authorities have but to call for probationers, and our young women will respond, as they have in the countries of our allies, without being drafted.

Newton, N. J., April 13, 1918.

THE BALTIMORE SPEECH.

Issues of the War Made Clear by the President.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Wilson's forceful address in Baltimore indicates a removal of all obscurity upon two points to which attention has been frequently called.

Some of his expressions heretofore have been susceptible of the interpretation that there is no enmity between the United States and the German people, but only between the United States and the Government of the German Empire. He now makes it clear that the civil administrators of the German Empire are themselves completely dominated and controlled by the German military rulers, who are the only real rulers and directors of German policy and action, and they, in a concrete and comprehensive sense, mean the German Army, officers and soldiers.

Now, this is a wholesome realization, for we must have waged this war but half-heartedly if we supposed that we were friendly to the German people, and they friendly to us, and that our only cause of enmity was against the German Government. Our just cause of wrath is against Prussian militarism wherever it extends, and in whomsoever embodied, and it would be folly to ignore the extent to which it pervades the masses of the German people. All that can safely be said is that if there are any of the German people who do not advocate the Prussian system and the Prussian ambitions, then we are not unfriendly to such German people.

The other point made clear by the President is that we are not waging war to lay the foundation for the spread of democratic forms of government among other nations. That general object would fail to justify the participation of this country in this war, with all of its prodigious expenditures and sacrifices. It is clear to the President that it is not a mere question of extending or preserving a particular form of government, in future, but that the very liberty of the world is involved in this contest, and, as he forcefully expresses it, that all of our efforts in behalf of liberty, from the American Revolution to the present day, would be in vain if we permitted Germany to triumph in this war.

The clarification of these points was timely and effective, but we should not lose sight of the more immediate justification and even necessity of our prosecuting this war with our whole determination and resources, to repel the invasion of our rights, defend the nationality of our citizens, and punish the transgressors of our national sovereignty—for there must be some punishment in the justice of which the President speaks, in referring to the final settlement of this war. Punishment of the responsible agencies for such crimes as have been perpetrated against civilization is implied in the use of the term "justice," for an essential element of punishment is disablement of the criminal so that he cannot repeat the crimes.

To dwell on these aspects makes the war personal and individual to our soldiers, and produces the highest efficiency in our armies.

Economy in Large Ships.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am glad to see that the Shipping Board is increasing the size of ships on its program. It is well known that large ships are more economical. Thus a vessel of 2,500 tons cargo capacity consumes about eleven pounds of coal per 100 ton-miles at eleven knots speed, while a vessel of 25,000 tons only consumes three pounds per 100 ton-miles at the same speed. In other words, a given amount of cargo is carried in the larger vessel with 27 per cent. of the fuel, a saving of 73 per cent. Put in another way, to move, say, 20,000,000 tons of cargo across the Atlantic would require 8,000 round trips of a 2,500-ton vessel, or 16,000 voyages. This would consume, roughly, about 6,500,000 tons of coal, whereas the 25,000-ton vessel would do the same work with 1,600 voyages and consume only 1,920,000 tons of coal, or 27 per cent. In practice the larger vessels would consume somewhat more, because they are generally faster, and speed must be paid for. In addition to saving 4,000,000 tons of coal, the number of men required for crews would be greatly reduced. When the vital need is to save men and coal and when the demand is for great capacity, it is a national mistake to build so many of these miniature ships. The only valid reason for their adoption is speed of construction. Does it take longer to build one ship of 25,000 tons or ten ships of 2,500 tons? The small vessels offer a greater number of targets for submarines, they are less able to resist storms, they offer more chances of accident in the ratio of more numerous voyages, they burn more coal, employ more labor, cost more money, and are of little or no use after the war. The ocean carrying trade of the future will be done with big steel ships.

Quartermaster Volunteers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer, a soldier of the Quartermaster Corps, has read the letter of John Kendrick Bangs. The interesting part of all this subject is that it is chiefly the civilian who has the "knock" against the Quartermaster Corps, and believes it a slacker's outfit. The average infantry, cavalry, artillery, &c., man regards his brother Quartermaster Corps man as much of a soldier as himself, and as being under the same elements of danger when on the battlefield with them. The writer believes that the Government should take the necessary steps to correct this erroneous impression of the civilian, and hopes this may yet come about. It is true that there are Quartermaster Corps officers and enlisted men, as well as of other branches of the army, still in this country. But, we can't all go over at once, and must wait for our turn. In the meantime, what harm is there in employing them in useful Government clerical and transportation work at Washington and other places, while they remain here?

R. CRUSOE.

When Robinson Crusoe was wrecked all alone
On an island far out in the sea,
He didn't sit down on the sands with a groan
And murmur, "Poor, unlucky me!"
He started to work right away with a will
And builded the first bungalow;
And he fashioned some tools and so managed to till
Some ground that a garden might grow.

Whatever he needed he made for himself
From things that were lying at hand—
Umbrella or shoes or a head-humping shelf
For the Winter preserves he had canned.
Some people, thus stranded, would lie down and sob
And presently perish, no doubt.
'Twas the way Mr. Crusoe got down to his job
That made him worth writing about.

RED CROSS ENLARGES WORK

March Report Shows Increased Care of American Troops Abroad.

The American Red Cross made public yesterday the March report of its Department for Military Affairs in France. The report indicates a large development of the Red Cross canteen, rest station, and other activities behind the American front. Thirty canteen stations are now being operated three miles behind the American first line trenches. In addition to supplying the troops with hot drinks and other refreshments, these canteens supply first aid materials. Four rest stations on the American lines of communication supply food and hot drinks to American troops en route to their camps from the various ports of debarkation. No charge is made for the drinks or any of the articles that are distributed.

The great German drive has created a new refugee problem for Paris, and the Department of Military Affairs detailed a large number of its workers to assist the civil authorities in caring for the thousands of refugees from the battle zone. Food and shelter were provided for large groups of them until they left Paris for the South. Shortly after the German offensive started a Red Cross field kitchen was dispatched to the front, and fed more than 75,000 refugees and soldiers.

The March report also shows that 5,000 pairs of socks, 780 sweaters, 1,200 pairs of gloves, 1,500 comfort kits, and 145 mufflers were distributed to American soldiers during that month. The Bureau of Donations also shipped for American soldiers in hospitals more than 15,000 shirts, 12,000 handkerchiefs, 13,000 pairs of socks, 15,000 pajamas, and 1,900 pairs of slippers. The Hospital Supply Service supplied 1,468 hospitals with 8,821 cases, weighing more than 100,000 pounds.

The American Red Cross delivered in March its first lot of trench bags—that is, bags to be used for the wounded when it is impossible to get them out of the trenches, where they may have to remain for hours without medical attention. These bags contain such food as cocoa, coffee, condensed milk, and such articles as scissors, electric torches, candles, matches, insect powder, feeding spoons, "tommy" cookers, and Greely hypodermic units. One bag is distributed for every twenty men.

The monthly report also shows that a new hospital for American Army and Navy officers has been opened by the American Red Cross on the French coast, and that another hospital, with 370 beds, has been opened for enlisted men. The Bureau of Farms now is operating ten farms, varying from three to 100 acres in size. Most of them have been seeded, and by the latter part of May the hospitals to which these farms are attached will be getting their vegetables from them. The Red Cross now has seventeen moving picture machines in operation at base hospitals, with an average attendance at each performance of 500 men.

PATRIOTISM BEFORE ZIONISM

S. H. Kohn Points Out Duty to Members of Young Judea.

Patriotism, not Zionism, should at this time occupy first place in the hearts of Zionists, according to Sylvan H. Kohn, President of Young Judea of New Jersey, who made an address yesterday afternoon at the closing session of that organization in Newark, N. J.

"German militarism, the German cult of the superman, aye, 'Deutschland uber alles,' must be uprooted. And as Zionists, no more sacred prerogative can fall to our lot than to bear arms 'neath the Stars and Stripes for the accomplishment of this end. We must also do our bit to aid the Liberty Loan, Thrift Stamp, food economy, camp welfare, Red Cross, and other relief campaigns constantly being conducted. Espousing a cause characterized by the highest idealism, it is a privilege for us to pledge our lives and capacities to the United States and her allies in this war, waged for the vindication of these ideals."

The annual election resulted as follows: President, Henry E. Marmorstein, Jersey City; First Vice President, Herman Heilperin, Newark; Treasurer, Miss Ruth Jacobson, Perth Amboy; Secretary, Robert Brown, Carteret; Organization Chairman, Nat Jacobowitz, Carteret; Social Supervisor, Miss Fanny Baer, Newark; Educational Supervisor, Miss Rose Brody, Perth Amboy; Athletic Supervisor, Louis Nass, Newark, and Instructor of Zionist Propaganda, Miss Minnie Blackman, New Brunswick.

NEW ISSUES $33,887,000.

Committee Last Week Rejected $21,049,000 of New Securities.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—In answer to inquiries, the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board made it clear today that, pending reorganization by the President, the work would proceed as heretofore, and that applications for the issue of securities should be addressed to it.

The Chicago Stock Exchange has sent to the committee a copy of its resolution "that the Committee on Stock List will require as a condition to the listing of any new capital issues the approval of the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board."

The committee last week disposed of twenty-eight applications, aggregating $54,936,000, of which $21,049,000 were disapproved. The $33,887,000 approved included $864,000 of refunding obligations, so that the new issues approved aggregated $33,023,000. New issues for the corresponding period last year amounted to $18,894,000. The increase is accounted for by the approval this week of a single issue of $25,000,000 of common stock. No securities are to be offered during the Liberty Loan campaign unless for meeting maturing obligations or otherwise vitally urgent.

COLLECTING ENEMY FUNDS.

Government Provides for Transfer of Securities Held in Other Lands.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The War Trade Board has issued a general license authorizing dealers in the United States to collect securities or coupons held by official custodians of the property of alien enemies in France and Great Britain without requiring declarations of enemy interest as provided by the President's order of Jan. 26.

In lieu of such declaration, it is directed that there be filed a declaration to the effect that the securities are in the custody of the official custodians of France or Great Britain, and this declaration must be filed either by the collecting dealer in the United States or by a correspondent in France or Great Britain who has signed the declaration of foreign correspondents required by the order of Jan. 26, or by the official custodian of the property of alien enemies in those countries.

This action has been taken for the reason that, when securities are held by official custodians of the property of alien enemies, the collecting agencies are not in a position to make the declaration of no enemy interest required by the executive order.

GERMANS SAVE WARSHIP.

The Rheinland Afloat Again, but is Badly Damaged.

LONDON, April 14.—A Reuter dispatch from Stockholm says that the German battleship Rheinland, which was reported stranded near the Aland Islands, has been refloated. The battleship is badly damaged.

WAR IS NOT TO STOP SOLDIERS' EDUCATION

Secretary Stokes of Yale Organizing Great System of Schools in France.

FIVE HUNDRED CLASSROOMS

Educators in the Service and Y. M. C. A. Men Fitted for the Work to Serve as Instructors.

A broad educational movement sanctioned by General Pershing for Americans in the field of war, unofficially known as the Soldiers' University, which is to have at least 500 classrooms extending along the rear of the lines of the American Army in France, is being organized under the general direction of Anson Phelps Stokes, Secretary of Yale University, it was announced yesterday by the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., at 347 Madison Avenue. A cable message dated at Paris yesterday, and received by the council, sets forth these chief purposes for carrying educational facilities to the fighting men:

"With the sanction of General Pershing work has started here for the organization of a university for the American soldiers in France. The purposes of this institution is not only to increase the efficiency of the fighting men while engaged in war, but at the same time to prepare them for vocational usefulness after the war. The project contemplates primary and elementary courses calculated to familiarize the soldiers with the institutions, customs, ideals, and genius of America, France, England, and the other allied nations, and, by contrast with present-day ideals of Germany, to bring the soldiers to a keen realization of the transcendental glorious cause they are fighting for.

"Anson Phelps Stokes, Secretary of Yale University, who has been in France some time, has consented to assume charge as director until another educator competent for the place can be obtained. Ultimately the control of the Soldiers' University will be placed in the hands of an army commission composed of three Americans of large educational experience. The university, which is really a component part of the United States Army, is to be officially known as the Department of Education.

"General Pershing has placed at the service of the university all soldiers who are experienced instructors and who will act as such whenever they are available and not needed in the more grim duties at the front. Among those already at work in the higher branches of the curriculum are Professor Reginald A. Daly, head of the department of geology at Harvard University, and Professor John Erskine of the department of English at Columbia University.

"As a nucleus for the Faculty for this far-flung university, which will have classes in all of the 500 Y. M. C. A. huts along the French front, there are among the 2,000 secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. abroad more than 100 college Presidents, public school superintendents, and Principals, and others of wide experience in educational affairs. Petit Dutaillis, Director of the Office National des Universités Ecoles Françaises, represents a group of French educators who have proffered their services enthusiastically toward the upbuilding of the unique university."

It is announced in a further statement by the council that college men who have been taken by the war from their uncompleted studies will thus receive opportunity to continue their studies and preparation for graduation upon their return after the war. The humblest private, too, will have his chance to improve mentally, and even the Three Rs will have a place in the curriculum for the American soldiers of foreign parentage. French is to be taught by French instructors.

Certificates will be issued to the soldiers who make good use of this educational opportunity, and these certificates may be presented for credits at American educational institutions, it is said. E. C. Carter, the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. with the American forces in France, is organizing the chain of classrooms.

FACE LOCAL OPTION ISSUE.

39 Cities in New York State Will Vote Two Days This Week.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 14.—Local option elections will be held in thirty-nine cities of the State this week, and because of the unprecedented large numbers of voters registered, due to the enfranchisement of women, the polls will be open two days. Accordingly, the results will not be known until Wednesday night.

While interest is keen in the result, as it will pertain to local option, the strength of the women's vote has caused much speculation. In nearly every city the registration of women equals that of the men, and in some places it has been even larger.

Officials of the Anti-Saloon League say that it is possible that thirty out of the thirty-nine cities will vote dry, and predict that temperance forces will be victorious in at least half of the municipalities.

Four propositions will be voted upon: Whether liquor shall be sold and drunk on the premises; whether liquor shall be sold, but be carried away to be consumed; whether pharmacies shall be allowed to sell liquor on a physician's prescription, and whether hotel keepers shall be allowed to sell intoxicants.

Three cities of the second class, Binghamton, Schenectady, and Syracuse, will vote this week, and the following thirty-six third class cities, Amsterdam, Auburn, Batavia, Beacon, Canandaigua, Corning, Cortland, Elmira, Fulton, Geneva, Glens Falls, Gloversville, Hornell, Ithaca, Jamestown, Johnstown, Kingston, Lackawanna, Little Falls, Lockport, Middletown, Mount Vernon, Newburg, New Rochelle, North Tonawanda, Norwich, Ogdensburg, Oneida, Oneonta, Oswego, Plattsburg, Port Jervis, Rome, Salamanca, Tonawanda, and Watertown.

YIELD OF SECURITY TAX.

State's Collections Under This Levy Since Last June $1,392,650.

ALBANY, April 14.—The sum of $1,392,650 has been collected from the new investment tax effective since June, Controller Travis announced today. This latest of the indirect taxes imposes a tax of 20 cents a year on every hundred dollars worth of bonds or serial notes or other obligations, excepting deeds of trust, mortgages, or other collateral used to secure investments.

The law, which is a continuation of the old Secured Debt Tax statute enacted in 1911, extends the idea of the mortgage recording tax. It provides a low fixed rate as a substitute for the unequal personal property assessment of securities. Up to the time of its passage the debtor was allowed to offset his debts against the local property assessment.

The statute represents a compromise between those who believe that such personal property should be taxed at full local rates but realize that most of it now escapes, and those who advocate exemption. It is optional in that it permits the owner of certain securities to present them to the State Controller or to his authorized agent recently designated to visit the several parts of the State at frequent intervals.

SENATOR STONE DIES AT CAPITAL

Second Stroke Causes a Coma from Which the Patient Fails to Emerge.

BURIAL TO BE IN MISSOURI

Governor Will Appoint Successor—Clark and Francis Mentioned as Probabilities.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—William Joel Stone, senior United States Senator from Missouri and Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations, died at his residence here at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. He had been critically ill since Wednesday, when he suffered a cerebral hemorrhage. A secondary attack at 5 o'clock this morning caused a state of coma. Senator Stone passed away without regaining consciousness. He was in his seventieth year, having been born May 7, 1848.

At the bedside when Senator Stone died were his wife and his children, Federal Judge Kimbrough Stone of Kansas City, Miss Mabel Stone, and Mrs. John W. Parkinson of St. Joseph, Mo.; a niece, Miss Margaret Winston of St. Louis; the attending physician, Dr. W. M. Sprigg, and a nurse.

In addition to his widow and children the Senator is survived by six grandchildren and several younger stepbrothers and stepsisters. Judge O. M. Spencer of St. Joseph, General Counsel of the Burlington Railway, is a cousin.

At the Stone home when Mr. Stone's death was announced by Dr. Sprigg were Senator and Mrs. Reed, Representative J. W. Alexander of Missouri, Colonel J. William Zevely of Muskogee, Okla., a close friend; Colonel Charles P. Higgins of St. Louis, Sergeant at Arms of the Senate; W. R. Hollister of Jefferson City, Assistant Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and John J. Cochran, Secretary to Senator Stone. They were joined later by Third Assistant Postmaster General A. M. Dockery of Gallatin, Mo., who was formerly Governor of Missouri, and Third Assistant Secretary of State Breckinridge Long of St. Louis.

Will Be Buried in Missouri.

Funeral services will be held at the Stone residence here tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. Horace J. Prettyman, Chaplain of the Senate, will officiate. The funeral party will start for Missouri at 6 o'clock tomorrow evening on the Pennsylvania Railroad train due to arrive in St. Louis at 5:50 o'clock Tuesday evening. The body will be taken on a night train to Jefferson City, where it will lie in state in the corridor of the new Capitol Wednesday forenoon. Wednesday afternoon the body will be removed to Nevada, Mo., where the interment will be made Thursday under the auspices of the Nevada Masonic Lodge. Church services will be held in Nevada.

Senator Reed and virtually all the members of the Missouri delegation in the House of Representatives, as well as members of the family, will accompany the body to Missouri. Committees representing Senate and House to attend the funeral will be appointed by Vice President Marshall and Speaker Clark tomorrow. A peculiar rule of the House probably will prevent Speaker Clark from going with the funeral party. Under this rule the Speaker may not absent himself from the House during a session of Congress for more than one day, except in the case of personal illness. Only a House recess, not likely at this time, would enable the Speaker to accompany the body of his old friend and campaign manager in the memorable pre-convention Presidential contest of 1912.

Senator Stone was entirely free of pain during his brief illness, his physician said tonight. He was stricken Wednesday on a street car while on his way to the Capitol, shortly after he had left his daughter, Miss Mabel Stone. He was removed to his home in an ambulance, after physicians had discovered that paralysis had affected his left side. For a short time he partly recovered the use of his left arm and leg, but the secondary stroke this morning left him helpless, and he would have remained so had he lived, his physician said.

"The saddest fate I could wish Senator Stone would be the recovery of consciousness, only to learn that he would always be a hopeless invalid," Dr. Sprigg said.

Mind on Senate and Battle.

Until the second stroke early this morning, Senator Stone remained in possession of his faculties, although at times he was slightly delirious. His mind, according to those who remained with him, was constantly occupied with affairs of the Senate, with which he had been dealing up to a late hour the night before he was stricken.

Senator Stone indicated great interest in the battle raging on the Western European front and expressed the fervent hope that the allied armies would be successful in their efforts to block the German assault. The last letter he wrote to his son contained a check for $50 with which he asked him to purchase War Saving Certificates and divide them equally among four of his grandchildren. He previously had purchased Liberty bonds for two other grandchildren.

There was a steady stream of callers at the Stone residence today. Vice President and Mrs. Marshall and many members of the Senate and House were among those who came to offer sympathy to the family. At the White House it was said that President Wilson, who had expressed great regret when he learned of Senator Stone's illness, was shocked when informed of his death.

Senator Stone's death is the seventh among members of the Senate since the war Congress began; six of those who died were Democrats. The others were Hughes of New Jersey, Newlands of Nevada, Brady of Idaho, Broussard of Louisiana, Husting of Wisconsin, and Lane of Oregon. Mr. Brady was the only Republican.

The political complexion of the Senate will not be affected by Senator Stone's death. It is generally expected that Governor Gardner of Missouri will appoint a Democrat to fill the vacancy until the general Congressional election next November. While reluctant to speculate tonight as to whom the Governor might select, Missourians here were inclined to think that the place would be offered either to Speaker Clark or David R. Francis, American Ambassador to Russia.

SENATOR STONE'S CAREER.

In Public Life 45 Years—Congressman, Governor, and Senator.

At the time of his death William Joel Stone was heartily in favor of the prosecution of the war against Germany, a change of heart which he forecast a day or so before he voted against the declaration by the United States.

"I am against a declaration of war," he had said, "but when it is declared I will be a war eagle screaming as loud as the rest. Blood is thicker than water, and, no matter what opinions a man might have about the need for war, any other position would be contemptible and no American could contemplate it. War is not play, and when we go into it I believe we should go in to the limit of men and money." His great fear had been, he added, that the United States would become involved in European politics if it entered the conflict.

At the entry of the United States into the war Senator Stone performed the trying feat of antagonizing his own party administration and then realigning himself with it in a generally satisfactory manner. It was in connection with the bill proposing the arming of American merchant ships that he took sharp issue with President Wilson. He stood with the dozen Senators whose opposition caused the failure of that measure at the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress and brought down the denunciation of the President upon "the wilful twelve." While Senator Stone made no apologies for his course on that occasion, he always contended it was in strict line with his duty as a Senator, because in accord with his convictions and, as he believed, in protection of America's interests.

His opposition to the declaration of war on Germany was also pronounced, and he declined to take charge of the war resolution, as would have been expected of him as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. He did not seek, however, to place obstacles in the way of a consideration and transferred the leadership to Senator Hitchcock, next ranking Democratic member of the committee. His attitude on these two questions was symbolical of his position toward the world war. He believed that American participation should be avoided if possible, but when the die was cast for war he changed over night. He took his place with the supporters of war measures and consistently maintained that attitude. He held it incumbent upon him to stand with his country regardless of his own views.

In Public Life Forty-five Years.

Mr. Stone was in public life forty-five years, and during that long period probably engaged in as many political contests as any man of his time, ranging all the way from controversies over county offices to the broadest national issues. Although he had served in the House of Representatives and had been Governor of his State, he first attracted national attention in connection with W. J. Bryan's first campaign for the Presidency, in 1896. He became the Missouri member of the Democratic National Committee, and soon took front rank among the Bryan managers, justifying the reputation for shrewdness and foresightedness he had gained in Missouri. In national as well as in State politics he worked quietly, seeking for effects. To this quality he owed the sobriquet of "Gumshoe Bill," and his friends say that he never sought to avoid the use of that name for himself.

Mr. Stone's position as a member of the National Committee led to his selection as Vice Chairman for Mr. Bryan's second campaign. As a consequence of their association the two men became close friends, and the intimacy continued until the Democratic Convention in 1912, when Mr. Stone led the fight for the nomination of Speaker Clark. The events of that time caused a cooling of the friendship, although Senator Stone, as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, put through most of the Bryan measures while Mr. Bryan was Secretary of State. He was largely responsible for prompt ratification of the long list of Bryan peace treaties of 1914.

Since going to the Senate in 1903 Mr. Stone had been to the front on all important questions. He also had been active in what may be termed the policies of the Senate. He assisted in electing Senator Clark of Arkansas to the office of President pro tempore in succession to Senator Bacon of Georgia, but shortly afterward, when Mr. Clark lined up with a few other Democrats in opposition to the Shipping bill, he found no more severe critic than his former supporter and friend. Indeed, Senator Stone seldom hesitated to attack any Senator, Democrat or Republican, who opposed what he believed to be deserving Administration measures.

Notwithstanding his pacifist attitude, Mr. Stone was made Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions at the St. Louis Convention in 1916, and to him fell the difficult work of shaping the platform on which President Wilson was re-elected. He worked on that almost constantly for forty-eight hours and never lost his composure. As illustrating his capacity to say "no" in an inoffensive way an incident may be quoted. The suffrage plank was the subject of much discussion, and as Chairman of the committee the Missouri Senator was frequently called upon by delegations of advocates of equal rights. On one occasion they were especially persistent. Senator Stone could not say what the committee would do, but he did not make a speech. He simply said, "Girls, you are too blamed impetuous." They went away good-natured, if not satisfied.

William Joel Stone was born in Madison County, Kentucky, May 7, 1848. His father was William Stone, also a native of Kentucky; his mother was Mildred Stone, nee Phelps. Mr. Stone's early training was obtained in the common schools of Kentucky. At the age of 15 he removed to Boone County, Missouri, and entered the State University. He began the study of law at Columbia in 1867 in the office of his brother-in-law, Colonel S. Turner. In 1869 he was admitted to the bar and removed to Bedford, Ind., and became associated with A. H. Carlton. In 1870 he returned to Missouri and settled at Nevada. He rose rapidly and soon became one of the leading men of the county.

In 1886 he appeared as a candidate for the Democratic Congressional nomination in the southwestern district of the State. Then there began a political relationship destined largely to figure in State politics. Living at Carthage, Mo., at that time and until his death a year or two ago, was William H. Phelps, a lawyer who was chiefly active as the representative of railway interests at Jefferson City, the capital of Missouri.

Phelps had always been a corporation man, and it was believed that with Phelps's influence the success of Stone's election would be certain. Stone's political speeches met with wild acclaim, and had he known it, it is pointed out, the candidate's powers of persuasion might have won the nomination and election without Phelps's assistance. The pair traveled together from place to place in meeting Stone's speaking appointments. According to a story told by Phelps, Stone would, as the pair approached a town or a rural Post Office where a crowd was waiting, suggest to Phelps the wisdom of getting out of the buggy and joining the crowd from the other side.

"Once," said Phelps, "I walked through a cornfield to strike another road leading to the place."

Mr. Stone's career in the House was uneventful, though he made a number of speeches. He was re-elected, but in 1890 declined to stand for a re-election, saying that he would ask the party to nominate him for Governor two years later. He was elected to this office in 1892, and served the term of four years. His administration was clean financially and administratively. But observers pointed out that before his term expired he placed a blot on the record of the Democratic Party of Missouri. It did not show until a half dozen years later, when, under the impulse of exposure of legislative and party secrets growing out of boodle prosecutions in St. Louis by Joseph W. Folk, a series of depositions was taken at Independence.

Revelations in His Career.

One deposition, that of Samuel B. Cook, Chairman of the Missouri State Democratic Committee, showed that a contribution of $2,500 had been made to the Democratic campaign fund of 1896 by William H. Phelps and credited in the published account of receipts to Cook himself. This falsification, Cook testified, was made at the suggestion of Governor Stone, who intimated that public knowledge of the receipt of funds from such a source would be hurtful to party prospects in the future. The change was made with the knowledge and concurrence of other party managers and leaders.

Mr. Stone acted as counsel for Colonel Moses Wetmore of St. Louis, a large stockholder in the Liggett-Myers Tobacco Company, at a time when the American Tobacco Company was seeking control of these shares. He advised Colonel Myers in bulling the price, and secured, under threats of ouster, higher prices for Wetmore than for any other holder of Liggett shares.

Not long after this Stone's connection with the Missouri Health Society was discovered. In his law practice he had said that he did not want corporation practice. Some years before Missouri had adopted a law prohibiting the sale of any baking powder containing alum as an ingredient. While efforts were being made to repeal the law Stone appeared in Jefferson City before a legislative committee and urged against the repeal. He appeared there as the legal representative of the Missouri Health Society, an organization, it was later discovered, that had only three members, all employes of Stone's office. Senator Stone was re-elected to the Senate in 1909 and again in 1914.

Lieutenant Henefin was graduated from Annapolis in 1917. He has just returned from active service, the marriage being hurried because of his brief leave of absence. Mrs. Henefin is a direct descendant of John Horne, one of the founders of the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1628 and of General Joseph Warren of the Continental Army. She is also a niece of Commander Frederick Horne, at present the United States Naval Attaché in Japan. The honeymoon is being spent in Lakewood.

HONOR ROSENWALD WITH A GOLD CUP

Chicago Merchant and Wife Praised for Great Gift in Recent Drive for War Relief.

WORK HAILED AS INSPIRING

Memento, Made in 1792, Got in England in Recognition of Great Britain's Interest in Jewry.

A reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Julius Rosenwald of Chicago at the Hotel St. Regis yesterday afternoon by leading Jews of New York in recognition of their efforts on behalf of the recent drive for funds for Jewish war relief. About 150 men and women attended, and joined in paying the tribute of affection and esteem which was manifested concretely by the presentation to Mr. Rosenwald of a large, gold loving cup inscribed:

To the Honorable Julius Rosenwald, patriotic American, faithful Jew, and far-seeing philanthropist, from the members of the American Jewish Central and People's Relief Committees, the Joint Distribution Committee, and Jewish Welfare Board as a mark of their love and esteem, and in token of their grateful recognition of his beneficent generosity and his compelling initiative, which brought to a successful issue the project, unique in Jewish history, of obtaining during the year 1917 the unprecedented sum of $10,000,000 for Jewish war relief and for welfare work among Jewish soldiers and sailors.

The cup, a graceful work of art, was made in England in 1792, and Jacob H. Schiff, who presided, said it was decided to get an English cup as an expression of the appreciation of American Jews for England's interest in the welfare of Jewry.

Mr. Schiff said the gathering had been held as a little surprise for Mr. and Mrs. Rosenwald, "whom we all love." He spoke of the real friendship of the community for them, and said it was felt that they should receive the compliment of being made aware that "we in New York are not unmindful of the wonderful work they have done.

"Of all our coreligionists in the United States," Mr. Schiff added, "there is no one who has done so much to make the name of the Jews respected and honored. Yet despite the high place Mr. Rosenwald has reached he is the same remarkable, unassuming man now he was twenty-five years ago, when he hardly was known." Mr. Schiff introduced Louis Marshall.

"We are always ready to praise those who have gone before us into the beyond," Mr. Marshall said, "but we too often fail to speak a word of admiration for those who still are in our midst. But here we are a group of old and intimate friends. Mr. Rosenwald's aid was a great contribution to the cause of the world and of humanity, and we ought to let the world know how we appreciate what he has done."

Judge Otto Rosalsky, who spoke for the Jewish Central Committee, and Morris Rothenberg for the People's Relief Committee, said Mr. Rosenwald's work would help the Jews to share in the benefits of the world's rebirth, in the travail of which all peoples now found themselves.

Cyrus Sulzberger read a letter from Felix M. Warburg, whose absence from the city prevented him from representing the Joint Distribution Committee, in which Mr. Warburg expressed warm personal friendship for Mr. Rosenwald and an ardent hope that all his work in many directions for the good of the country might meet with success. On his own behalf Mr. Sulzberger said he felt that not only had Mr. Rosenwald's contribution of a million dollars meant relief for many thousands, but that it had benefited those at home by serving as an inspiration to save them from materialism.

"I do not praise him for the amount he gave," said Judge Julian W. Mack of Chicago, "I do not know what else he could do with the money he has; but I honor him for the example he sets in giving himself." Judge Mack added that it was proper that New York should recognize what Mr. Rosenwald accomplished by setting the East an example of generosity, and proper that the speaker, for Chicago, should express thanks for what New York did, once it got down to work. Judge Mack spoke warmly of the inspiration Mrs. Rosenwald had been to her husband and Jewish workers. He praised Mr. Rosenwald's open-mindedness and hoped that some day he might be converted to the cause of Zionism.

In acknowledging the honor Mr. Rosenwald said he did not deserve the gift and that he was supremely touched by a tribute far beyond anything he ever had dreamed. Turning to Mr. Schiff, he added:

"May I say, Mr. Schiff, that it was your example and the example of others like you that I have tried to follow and that I hoped always to be where men of your stamp stood. My one regret is that my good mother could not be present because no joy in my life ever is complete without her sharing it with me. The inspiration that Judge Mack referred to as coming from my, by far, better half is only a small part of what she is entitled to as her share in anything that I do—I refer only to the things that are commendable.

"One of the greatest satisfactions I have in connection with the Jewish campaign is that it has been brought to my notice that the great success of the Red Cross fund was due in part to the start the contribution from our fund gave it, and that without that start it would not have been possible for that fund to reach $100,000,000."

Mrs. Rosenwald, in saying thanks for her share in the honors bestowed, said she felt that a great responsibility had been placed upon her and her husband to accomplish greater deeds of service, if they might be vouchsafed strength and long life to that end, and hoped that the meeting might mark the beginning of a larger and better service than any achieved before.

SHE SCARED BURGLAR AWAY.

Miss Livingston, Apartment House Owner, Was Awakened by Thief.

Miss Julia Livingston, owner of the Seminole apartment building, at Broadway and Sixty-ninth Street, put a burglar to flight last night when he invaded her rooms on the sixth floor, from which he escaped by using a steamer chair as a bridge over the six-foot chasm which separates the Seminole from the roof of the adjoining house, at 145 West Sixty-ninth Street. Miss Livingston was awakened at 10:30 o'clock by a man moving about in her room, and when she called to Miss Alice Tracy, a friend who was asleep in an adjoining room, the invader fled to the rear rooms. Miss Livingston telephoned to the Seminole office, which relayed the alarm to the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, and Lieutenant Hammel and a squad of men soon surrounded the place.

Hammel found a steamer chair suspended from the Seminole fire escape to the roof of the next house, showing the way the thief had gone. A search of the adjoining houses and yards, however, failed to discover the invader. It is supposed the burglar climbed the apartment fire escape and entered by the window.

SPEAKER ASSAILS JUDGES.

Labor Lawyer Says Courts Are "Aristocratic in Feeling."

Speaking in the forum of the Church of the Messiah last night, William B. Rubin of Milwaukee, lawyer for the American Federation of Labor, declared that the courts in this country were aristocratic in feeling, unmindful of the rights of the poor, and for the most part representative of judicial tyranny. "The majority of judges who sit in our courts," said Mr. Rubin, "are ermine eaten and have been recruited from the ranks of poor lawyers and cheap politicians. It would appear that the courts are trying to convince the people that edicts and ermine are divinely bestowed and that they have not derived their powers from the people. The Federal judge when appointed becomes a tyrant for life."

DR. JOWETT SPEAKS FAREWELL TO CHURCH

Says He Goes Home as "Ambassador of American Hearts"—Many Appeals for Loan.

With manifest sadness on his own part and on the part of those who crowded the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday morning, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Jowett said farewell to the congregation to which he has ministered for the last seven years. Dr. Jowett is about to return to England in response, as he explained, "to a call as imperative as the peal of a soldier's bugle," and said he would go back "as ambassador of the hearts of the American people." More than 2,000 persons were excluded from the church after every seat had been occupied.

"I am too old to fight and I may not be able to aid materially in a physical way," Dr. Jowett said to the old friends who heard him amid a deep hush, "but there is much to be done morally and spiritually in the land to which I am about to return. Should the morale of a people suffer impairment and the spiritual vision grow faint, munitions could not win a victory. In answering the call of my country I am returning to a land that is bleeding. Were I speaking to an English congregation today, half of its members would be bereaved. It may seem strange to some, but all these heavy sacrifices have been made nobly and without regrets.

"I do not for one moment believe that we can lose in this struggle, and I feel that our final triumph is as sure as the morning. In taking my leave I express the deepest thanks for the hospitality extended to me and mine and when I return to England I will feel myself to be the ambassador of the hearts of the American people. No man will be able to speak as I will speak because I have enjoyed your affections in the fullest measure. I rejoice that I have not been driven away and I also rejoice in the thought that I will be welcomed back. May grace and love in one Saviour rest upon you."

Dr. Jowett is to assume the pastorate of the Westminster Congregational Chapel in London.

The war again was the topic uppermost in the sermons in many other churches yesterday. The seriousness of the present situation was not minimized, but the pastors generally encouraged their congregations with appeals for all of America's traditional response to the country's needs. The Third Liberty Loan was not forgotten, and many were the appeals for the utmost investment in its bonds.

George Creel's recent upholding of the unpreparedness of America when she entered the war was rebuked by Rabbi Samuel Schulman in Temple Beth-El. He pleaded for universal military service, said the Jews, who never had been cowards, would welcome it, and that the war itself had taught that the country always should be kept at that high pitch of preparedness which he had joined in urging for three years before we engaged in the conflict.

There was loud applause in St. Paul's Methodist Church when Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn asserted "America did not begin the war, but she will end it." He spoke of his confidence in English-speaking people and said that men who protested they are patriots and yet expressed dislike for England were not good citizens.

ITALY ASSISTING Y. M. C. A.

Duke of Aosta Opens Quarters Behind the Firing Line.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, April 14.—The American Y. M. C. A., directed by John S. Nollen, has only very recently begun its valuable work on the Italian front, but it has accomplished very satisfactory results already. I saw the headquarters in a village only a few miles from the first line trenches.

The Italian Government has put at the association's disposal a handsome villa surrounded by a garden, which was left by the owners during the Italian retreat. A library is being established, and a piano, gramophone, and various games have been collected to amuse the soldiers when they return from the firing line.

The Y. M. C. A. is amalgamated with the Italian association, Casa del Soldato, (House of Soldiers,) which provides drinks, bread, postcards, and writing material for soldiers. The two associations, which are working splendidly together, accomplish much as complements to each other.

The Duke of Aosta, Commander of the Third Army, much beloved by his soldiers, formally opened one of these houses at a village two miles from the firing line. He expressed himself as extremely satisfied with all the arrangements taken for the welfare of his soldiers. Several orators spoke in the presence of 5,000 soldiers. Among others a Y. M. C. A. man named D'Anunzio made a most stirring speech in Italian, which called forth from the troops repeated cheers. D'Anunzio, who spoke with an American accent, explained the reasons for America's entrance into the war, and assured Italy of America's support until victory was gained. He ended by warmly praising the Third Army for its admirable attitude and brilliant resistance during the retreat of October and November of last year.

ROCKEFELLER FUND SPENDS $11,457,086

Foundation Devotes Nearly $6,000,000 of This Total to War Work in Year.

PRINCIPAL NOW $120,776,000

Trustees State That Resources Are Relatively Limited, in View of Present Conditions.

The Rockefeller Foundation spent $5,944,969 in war work and a total of $11,457,086 in educational and relief work of all kinds in 1917, according to an installment of a review of the work of the Foundation issued yesterday by Dr. George E. Vincent, President of the Foundation.

"The Trustees of the Rockefeller Foundation are deeply sensible of the immeasurable needs occasioned by the European war," Dr. Vincent said. "The unit of adequate expenditure to meet even in a limited measure the enormous devastation is millions of dollars, where it was once thousands and hundreds. The resources of the Foundation, measured by such needs, are relatively limited.

"Widely disbursed in aid of a large number of existing agencies the income would have little appreciable effect. Only by concentrating its funds upon a few convincing demonstrations and statesmanlike programs can the Foundation justify its existence, and constructively 'promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world.'"

The disbursements of the Foundation in 1917 are given in the following table:

War work	$5,944,969
International Health Board	557,829
China Medical Board	501,422
Rockefeller Institute	3,127,914
Founder's designations	942,251
Miscellaneous—
After-care of infantile paralysis cases, mental hygiene, School of Hygiene, and public health miscellaneous	277,085
Administration	105,666
Total	$11,457,086

The condition of the principal of the fund is described as follows:

"On Dec. 1, 1917, the principal fund of the Foundation had a book value of $120,776,000 and a market value of $104,000,000. The income of this fund for the year 1917 was $7,158,852. To this were added a balance carried over from 1916, a gift by John D. Rockefeller of $5,500,000, and the sum of $5,000,000, taken by vote of the Trustees from the principal fund."

The decision of the Trustees on the policy to be pursued by the fund is told as follows in the report:

"Government activities are for the most part necessarily and properly deliberate; they are limited by legal and administrative restrictions. The Trustees of a foundation have, within the provisions of its charter, relatively a free hand. Only such an institution, for instance, could select the world's leading authority on a certain disease, provide a staff and all necessary funds, and send him to foreign countries in order to eradicate from the world one of the deadliest of infectious maladies. It would be a mistake, therefore, for the Rockefeller Foundation to hamper itself by adopting inflexible rules, or to tie its own hands with red tape.

"Yet there are things which it cannot successfully or wisely do. It cannot, for example, give money or make loans to individuals, or invest in securities which have a philanthropic rather than a business basis, or assist in securing patents or aid altruistic movements which involve private profit. It must refrain from supporting propaganda which seek to influence public opinion about social and political proposals, however disinterested and important these may be. Thus recent appeals to finance in whole or part a speakers' bureau in behalf of the war, the teaching of patriotism in the schools, and an advertising campaign for national prohibition have been on principle denied.

"Demonstrations such as those which are being made at home and abroad in the field of public health, well-organized co-operative undertakings, like the camp and community plan for the welfare of American soldiers, a comprehensive program of inquiry of the sort which the National Committee for Mental Hygiene is carrying out, represent characteristic Foundation policies. The aim always kept in mind is not to assume governmental or social functions, but to show that certain things can be done successfully, and then as soon as may be turn these over to the community."

JAMES EDWARD WARE DIES.

Architect Was a Pioneer in Designing Fireproof Warehouses.

James Edward Ware, for nearly half a century a practicing architect in this city, died at his home, 1,285 Madison Avenue, yesterday, after a brief illness. Mr. Ware was one of the pioneers in designing the modern type of fireproof warehouse, notable examples of his work being the Manhattan Store and Warehouse Company buildings, at Lexington Avenue and Forty-second Street and at Seventh Avenue and Fifty-second Street. Mr. Ware also designed many improved city dwellings for the poor. He was one of the prize winners in the competition held by the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor in an effort to better living conditions in the congested districts.

Mr. Ware also designed the 12th Regiment Armory, at Columbus Avenue and Sixty-first Street, and the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-third Street. In later years his sons, Franklin B. Ware, former State Architect, and Arthur Ware, were associated with him. Mr. Ware is survived by his wife, three sons, Franklin B., Arthur, and Foster Ware, and three daughters, Mrs. Egbert S. Hurd, Mrs. George Sykes, and Miss E. Gladys Ware.

MME. BINNER SAYS:
The newly designed Binner Corset cultivates a faultless figure—the result of my new system of individual pattern cutting. Old patterns obtained by the ordinary method are now useless, if one is to be comfortably and correctly corseted.
For the JEUNE FILLE, a new corset with original features; an invaluable corset for the maturing, youthful figure. Moderately priced.

You Hear Some Men Say, "What does this Government expect, anyway? It's piling taxes on us, hampering our business, taking our profits, and asking us to buy bonds, bonds, and still more bonds. When is this thing going to end?"

When you hear anybody talking in that strain, give him this to think about:

"It isn't a question of what the Government wants. It's a question of what YOU want—what YOU expect.

"Do you expect to have any business, any home, any family, any country, after the war?

"Over in Belgium and France there are thousands of men who can't even find the place where their business was located—who don't know where their families are. Over there men are dying for the sacred cause of liberty and justice, and asking no reward but a hero's grave.

"Don't you think that the first and only duty of our Government is to stop this frightful slaughter, this waste of blood and treasure?

"What do your temporary interests amount to as against the victory of our army, the permanent safety of American business, the preservation of human liberty and civilization?"

All true Americans should answer these questions honestly.

We must all put self behind us and back our Government, our soldiers and sailors with all the dollars we can possibly get together UNTIL WE WIN THE WAR.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Security Prices Yield Little Ground

With each passing week the United States draws further away from the idea that business can go on as usual during the war. It seems impossible now that just a year ago the belief was widely held in this country that our part in helping the Allies would consist of provisioning and financing their armies; that the struggle would be ended by our moral and material support before it would be possible for American soldiers to take a prominent place on the fighting line. War is now dominating all other activities on an increasing scale, and by the same measure the weight of this country's influence on the final result is increasing. Adverse criticism of the multitudinous war activities of the Administration is narrowing down to the essential weaknesses with a view to bringing about improvement rather than to make political capital. The conviction that the United States must eventually take over a large part of the actual work of destroying the German military power was clearly expressed on Friday by ex-President Taft, when he said that it behooved this nation to plan for an army of at least 5,000,000 men to be landed and maintained in Europe, and to abandon ideas of an early peace in favor of a program for two, and possibly three, years more of war. The production of nonessentials goes on apace, while the machinery that has proved capable of turning out hundreds of thousands of automobiles in a year has failed of producing a single thousand airplanes. In that respect we have lagged far behind the other belligerents simply because the necessity for concentration on war work has been slower in coming home to us. The great drive, for which the Germans spent last Winter in preparation, is now in its fourth week without showing signs of approaching exhaustion. It has disclosed the utter fallacy of the belief that Germany and Austria had been reduced by loss of man power and internal economic distress to a point that would make them receptive to almost any kind of a peace offer. With the release of most of the armies engaged in the Russian campaign the enemy has been able to match the Allies man for man on the active section of the western front, and so far has proved equal to the frequent calls for fresh troops to make good the tremendous losses he has suffered. The situation emphasizes the obligation that rests upon every citizen of this country to put other matters aside where by so doing he can hasten the equipment and transportation of men to succor the French and British troops.

The stock market continues to move within a narrow range with the trading areas substantially those marked out by the first week of the German offensive, although prices have lost some ground. At no time has the list shown by wide price moves any conclusive indications of the prevalence of fears that the French and English armies might be driven apart, or that the enemy might reach the Channel ports. It broke in the last hour of Thursday's session on receipt of disturbing news of the taking of several important villages, and the leading industrials closed with a net loss that night of 1.10 points, but with more complete news part of this loss was regained in the following session. Looking back over the course of prices since the resumption of active warfare, it is plain that investors have at no time given way to alarm over the outlook; the situation has properly been regarded as a serious one, but there has been evident an undertone of confidence in the strength of every link in the seventy-five mile chain that is holding the Hun from the strategic points which he must gain if his sacrifice is to be rewarded.

The speculative fever has subsided until it requires an unusual disturbance to produce anything remotely approaching what the Street regards as a fair day's business in stocks. The professional operator has either quit the market or has limited his dealings to small trades in a few of the industrials, which still bear promise of quick action. The supervision by the Exchange authorities of short sales and the imposition of the new stock transfer taxes may have played some part in narrowing operations, but conditions more fundamental in nature are mainly responsible for the dullness. It will be interesting to see what restrictive effect the new handicaps have when the prospect of approaching peace negotiations, or other important developments, set the stage once more for an active, speculative stock market.

The fact has been clearly demonstrated by the success which has attended the first week's drive for loan subscriptions that the new issue can be fully placed, and probably oversubscribed by a generous margin, in the face of a declining market for other securities, including even the outstanding Liberty 4s. Bond men have given up attempts to explain to buyers why the older issues should be selling under par. They emphasize the thought that the behavior of the 3½s and 4s has no relation to the citizen's duty to subscribe as much as possible for the new offering. The money must be provided to carry on the war, and the subscribers must not be controlled by the caution which they would be expected to use in considering other forms of investment. It is considered by many responsible authorities in the investment field that Secretary McAdoo made an unwise decision when he made the new 4¼s unconvertible and served notice that the conversion privilege of the 4s ended with the exchange for the issue now being sold. It is this fact which has prevented the 4s from selling close to par on the prospect of the opportunity to convert, and which will operate against the new issue if conditions make it necessary to increase the coupon rate for subsequent loans.

The cotton market has executed an unusual and, for most traders, expected right-about-face, and at the close of business last week, after three successive heavy declines, represented a loss of approximately $20 per bale from the highest prices made two weeks ago. It appears that at the very moment when it seemed that nothing short of drastic price-fixing by the Government could check the violent rise the law of supply and demand took the bottom out of the bull movement. With spinners' requirements largely provided for, the gamblers in futures suddenly found their position untenable, and a natural slump resulted.

APPROVE $33,887,000 NEW CAPITAL ISSUES

Federal Committee Also Turns Down Applications Aggregating $21,049,000 in Week.

The following statement was issued by Pierre Jay, Chairman of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, yesterday, it having been authorized by the Federal Reserve Board in response to many inquiries from all parts of the United States.

"In answer to questions raised from several quarters, the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board wishes it made clear that, pending the appointment by the President of the new committee, the work of the old committee would proceed on the same lines as heretofore, and that applications for the issue of securities should be addressed to it.

"The Chicago Stock Exchange has sent to the Committee a copy of its resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Stock List will require as a condition to the listing of any new capital issues the presentation of the approval of the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board.

"During the week just passed the committee disposed of twenty-eight applications, aggregating $54,936,000, of which $21,049,000 were disapproved. The $33,887,000 approved included $804,000 of refunding obligations, so that the new issues approved aggregated $33,023,000. New issues for the corresponding period last year amounted to $18,894,000.

"The increase of this year over last year is readily accounted for by the approval this week of a single issue of $25,000,000 of common stock. While the total issue approved is large, it should be borne in mind that such approvals have been given with the understanding that no offering of securities will be made during the pending Liberty Loan campaign.

"Unless such issues are for the special purpose of meeting maturing obligations, or are otherwise vitally urgent, the committee will be guided in its future operations as nearly as possible by the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act, so that the operations of the subsequent committee and the present committee will be as consistent as possible for the time being.

"However, the committee has not yet decided to reduce the minimum for public utility and industrial issues considered by it from $500,000 to $100,000."

"I Have Not Yet Begun to Fight"

That was the answer of John Paul Jones, when he was called upon to surrender his ship. That will at all times be the answer of the American people

Our soldiers are ready to fight, but we have not yet begun to back them up. The financial possibilities of our country have not begun to be exhausted. The Third Liberty Loan calls for an enormous sum of money, but we can raise it, and we will.

We will absorb this Loan, we will oversubscribe it, because our soldiers and sailors must have the equipment the money will buy; because VICTORY depends upon it; because it is essential to the fulfillment of a promise to the world. And America will keep her word.

Invest in Liberty Bonds, to save lives—the lives of our own sons.

SHIPPERS PROTEST NEW R. R. RATE RISE

Board of Trade Contends That Funds for New Equipment Should Be Raised by Taxes.

SAY NEED ARISES FROM WAR

Contend That Policy of Paying for Betterments Out of Capital Should Not Be Changed.

Objections are urged against a reported movement by the Federal Railway Administration for a sharp increase in railway freight rates, in a statement by the Railway Committee of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation.

The purpose of the proposed increase, according to the report, is to exact from shippers the capital which is required to purchase 100,000 freight cars and many locomotives, to be used for strictly war purposes. These are war needs, and should be paid for from war taxes, not from revenue exacted from shippers alone, according to the report, which criticises the alleged plan of the Government as unfair and reactionary in several respects.

"The recent advance of 15 per cent. was warranted as a result of conditions brought about by the war, and the New York Board of Trade and Transportation and many other organizations representing the shippers not only acquiesced in such advance but advocated it by formal resolution as a necessary step in the public interest," the report says. "But there was never any public approval of a policy which warranted or would permit rates high enough to create reserve funds for the extension of lines or for the increase of rolling stock, because these were regarded as betterments which should be provided by investors and not by the shippers.

"It is reported, and here referred to as pertinent in this connection, that orders for 100,000 freight cars, many locomotives and other equipment are contemplated, i. e., contemplated by the Government, and this is suggested as ample warrant for the proposed sweeping advance of rates in order that the cost of these betterments may be provided.

"This declaration exhibits an inexcusable ignorance of the long-accepted policy and methods by which railroad extensions or betterments have been provided or a willful disregard thereof, and also a total disregard of existing conditions and facts.

"If the war did not exist, or if it should suddenly end, the Government would find no warrant for ordering 100,000 cars, many locomotives, &c., because the Government would have no use for them whatever eighteen months thereafter. The Government contemplates ordering these cars and locomotives, if report is correct, because as a war measure it controls the railroads, and it orders them as a war measure. Until war activities created an abnormal traffic and abnormal conditions the railroad business of the country was proceeding with its accustomed regularity and efficiency. The necessity for these 100,000 cars and many locomotives is a war necessity and a war expense, and the cost should be met as other war expenses are met.

"With the most earnest desire to support the Administration in every policy which it shall adopt, we venture to urge, nevertheless, that no precipitate action be taken regarding the advance of railroad rates, and that, if any advance is contemplated, the question be laid before the public and openly and frankly discussed, and finally decided upon its merits."

The report is signed by E. J. Tarof, J. Spencer Smith, Frank Rochambeau, John A. C. Jansen, Louis W. Williams, E. W. Margetts, and William Archibald of the Committee on Railway Transportation.

UNION LABOR UNITED TO AID WAR SAVING

Teamsters' Brotherhood Makes an Assessment of $1 a Month Per Member During Conflict.

MANY UNIONS INVEST $1,000

Campaign Among Workers Organized to Bring All Into the Stamp Buying Movement.

Evidence of the eagerness with which the working people desire to support the Government in the prosecution of the war was presented by the War Savings Committee yesterday in the announcement that the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, had adopted a resolution to assess the members of all the various locals $1 per month for the purchase of War Savings Stamps. The resolution, which the committee made public as worthy of emulation, reads:

Whereas, The United States Government, in stating its war aims to the citizenry of the country, have brought forward the facts as to the imperative need of a whole-souled policy of co-operation of the masses to assure the ultimate and final success of the great struggle for democracy, and,

Whereas, The attitude and policy of the present administration of the Government towards organized labor and its members has been a matter of record during the entire administration as a feeling of mutual understanding, guaranteeing as it has done a square deal for organized labor, and given to the labor movement the right to have a voice in the carrying out war aims and policies of the Government, and,

Whereas, The Teamsters Joint Executive Council in session at its regular meeting on Tuesday evening, April 9, 1918, decided by unanimous vote to further prove the loyalty of the organized teamsters of New York City by starting a drive to further the purchase of Thrift Stamps and Liberty bonds, and,

Whereas, Realizing that not all of our members may be able to purchase Liberty bonds, but that the Thrift Stamps are within the reach of all, and,

Whereas, The Joint Council in session unanimously adopted a motion that all affiliated locals within the jurisdiction of Joint Council No. 16, New York City, be assessed one dollar per member per month, for the duration of the war, and that the one dollar per member additional be credited to the member paying same, and said member to receive for the additional dollar a like amount of Thrift Stamps, and that it was resolved that the assessment was compulsory on the membership of the teamsters affiliated with Joint Executive Council No. 16 of New York City, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we the Board of Business Agents of the Organized Teamsters of New York City, do hereby pledge ourselves as a unit to carry out the mandates of the Joint Executive Council No. 16, and that we recommend that the mandate of the Joint Council become operative on the first day of May, 1918, and that a committee of this board be appointed to attend to all the necessary detail in conjunction with same.

The Milk Drivers' Protective Union 582, composed of 3,500 drivers in this city, at its last regular meeting raised the membership dues from $1 to $2 a month, the extra dollar from each member to be invested in War Savings Stamps, which will be returned to the member. There are sixteen locals of the Teamsters Brotherhood in New York with more than 18,000 members, and Michael J. Cashal, First General Vice President of the brotherhood, declared yesterday that the other locals would follow the example of the milk drivers.

The War Savings campaign among organized labor is in charge of Peter J. Brady, Supervisor of The City Record. Representatives of 250 of the 600 locals in New York City have accepted membership in the Labor Committee which Mr. Brady is forming to carry on the campaign.

The unions which have already invested $1,000 in War Savings Stamps include the Dock and Pier Carpenters, 1456, membership 2,300; Franklin Union 23, membership 2,500; Printing Pressmen 51, membership 2,300; Web Pressmen 25, membership 1,900; New York Photo-Engravers 1, membership 1,400, and Hotel and Restaurant Employes 3, membership 600. The Stereotypers' Union, with a membership of 800, and the Theatrical Protective Union, with a membership of 1,150, have invested $500 each in War Stamps.

BUILDING TRADES SUBSCRIBE TO LOAN

$602,100.50 Taken by Industries Hit Hardest by the War.

WOULD EXCEED $8,600,000

All Types of Construction to Have Government O. K. in Wartime Program.

The enthusiasm with which the building trades are taking up the Third Liberty Loan is attributed in a large degree to the fact that the Administration has made it possible for all building interests to figure in Government operations on a competitive basis.

Assurances were brought back from the Capitol this week by a prominent building material manufacturer that no particular type of construction would be barred.

In other words, no material or form of construction will be given preference over any other kind so long as a good, permanent type of building can be erected that will be a salable structure after the war.

This includes even reinforced concrete and poured cement for housing construction, which it was feared would be considered by the authorities as bordering upon experimental building assembly.

It is the intention of the Government to encourage contractors to figure in Government construction work, even though they heretofore have not done that kind of construction, and plans and specifications are being made available for them both here and in Washington.

With every member of the Building Trades Employers Association represented by sons, daughters, or employes in the American armies in France or at sea the first week of the Third Liberty Loan drive was marked by subscriptions amounting to $602,100.50 with a goal set to exceed the $8,600,000 total subscribed by the building industries of this city in the last loan, despite the fact that the building trades have been foremost among those industries hit hardest by the war.

Only six of the thirty-two associations comprising the Building Trades Employers Association have met, although meetings will be held practically every night this week until all the organizations have met.

The Associated Roofers and Sheet Metal Workers, the Gravel Roofers Association, the Metal Covered Door Manufacturers, and the Metal Ceiling Association subscribed $140,900; the light fixture and allied trades took $311,200.50 worth and the Master Painters and Decorators subscribed another $150,000.

The Building Trades Employers Association has elected Ronald Taylor President, Fred B. Tuttle Vice President, Albert N. Chambers Second Vice President, Charles J. Kelly Chairman of the Board of Directors, and J. P. Ryan Treasurer.

With the idea of bringing the new conditions affecting the building industry to a closer understanding among the contracting interests of this vicinity the annual dinner of the Building Trades Employers Credit Association, to be held in the Hotel McAlpin on Saturday night, April 27, at which time it is hoped Governor Whitman will be present and speak, is to be made the occasion of pointing the new construction and realty era at hand. H. S. Gaines, Vice President of the National Cement Manufacturers Protective Association; Audley Clarke, President of the association; William A. Prendergast, formerly Controller of the City of New York, and Allen E. Beals of the Allen E. Beals Corporation will explain the relationship that construction and building have in winning the war and in keeping the war won.

In the meantime evidence is accumulating that building material prices are still below their top level, unless adequate coal supplies are given to the manufacturing plants. Portland cement prices are sure to advance to higher levels unless more coal can be obtained in Zones 1 and 2, and the prospects for more fuel are not particularly bright. Mill shipments in this commodity reflect the heavy orders that preceded the recent price advance, and movements will continue to be heavy during April and May, with a slump in June, if the coal situation is relieved. The trade is being advised to take advantage of present quotations.

The same conditions governing cement are applicable in the matter of plate and window glass, except that no change in price is looked for until after April 24. If the price situation changes after that date it will be on a higher level.

Common brick, according to the Dow Service Daily Building Reports, was in a ragged market, with some brick selling as low as $9 a thousand wholesale. The market level on good brick this morning will be $9.50 to $10, with no Raritan brick for sale here. The lower price was brought on several loads that had been in the market for some time, and the owners decided to sell rather than have demurrage pile up against the cargoes.

At noon Saturday there were 6,300,000 brick on hand in this market, with none scheduled to arrive before tomorrow. Second-hand brick is now quoted at $12 per load of 1,500 for delivery below Forty-second Street; $12.50 between Forty-second Street and 110th Street, and $13 for deliveries in Long Island City. There also is a large quantity of hydraulic pressed enameled white brick available for immediate delivery in New York.

In the general building material market there are at the moment fewer price changes than have featured the lists for almost six months. The industry seems to be awaiting the changes that are expected to be reported in the metals market in the near future, and in the meantime demand is such as to keep supplies comfortably moving so as not to affect prices upward. Some lines have actually dropped, notably lead and linseed oil, and in the absence of heavy private work and the increasing preponderance of Government work the disposition seems to be to hold levels as low as possible for Government acceptance.

The thirty-seventh annual election of officers of the Building Material Exchange last week resulted in making Frederick A. Rose of the Greater New York Brick Company President, John W. Ruth Vice President, William C. Morton Treasurer, and the above, with George A. Moltor, John M. Campbell, Irving J. Rose, Edward D. King, H. P. Brown, Allen J. Hule, Elliott Smith, (the retiring President,) Thomas Cumming, H. M. Halstead, and Edwin B. Morse, Trustees.

MERCHANTS OPPOSE CENSUS

Association Says Conditions Will Not Be Normal in 1920.

The Merchants' Association has gone on record as opposed to taking the usual census of agriculture, manufactures, quarries, and mining in the year 1920, the end of the census period. The Board of Directors find that conditions have so interfered with the normal conduct of manufacturing, mining, and quarrying, and agriculture that a census taken in 1920 would be misleading rather than helpful.

The Merchants' Association has approved Senator Hoke Smith's bill providing for the employment of convict labor in the production of war and Government supplies and authorizing the purchase of such supplies by the Federal Government. The association points out that the bill is framed by the American Federation of Labor and is intended to make available the services of 120,000 convicts who would otherwise be maintained in idleness. The convicts would receive for the services the current rate of wages after deducting the cost of

BUY YOUR WINTER EGGS NOW

Eggs are not exactly cheap, but they are cheaper than they were last Winter, and it is confidently predicted that they will be dearer next Winter than they were last, so the Food Administration is advising housewives to lay in supplies to last well along toward next Easter.

The preserving process, while old to country housewives, is unknown to many city people who have learned in recent years to depend upon cold storage and speculators for their supplies, except in Spring and early Summer. The Food Administration has gone to the Department of Agriculture experts for directions, which are embodied in a bulletin, easily understood. Two methods are offered, which are said to be about equally efficacious, one in which lime water is used, and the other depending upon a saturated solution of sodium silicate.

On the theory that a novice is more likely to be interested in a process that is fully understood than in one that seems mysterious the explanation is offered that the shell of an egg is nearly all mineral, mostly lime, held together by about the amount of organic matter that is to be found in bone. This shell is porous, but when fresh laid is covered with a slight film that makes it airtight. When the hen sits on the egg, this film disappears, and the air penetrates and aids the germination and decay. If the egg is exposed under ordinary conditions this film disintegrates more slowly, but ultimately the air enters and the egg spoils. The object of surrounding the egg for preserving with a saturated solution of sodium silicate or lime is to keep the air out by supplying a medium that will replace the decaying outside film that nature put there.

The process is extremely simple, and depends wholly for its success upon procuring proper materials and not upon skill. The eggs, to begin with, must be fresh and clean, not washed clean, but laid clean. The cleanliness requirement is explained by the fact that wherever there is a spot of soil on the shell the sealing liquid does not come into contact with the shell, and pores are left open to let in germs of decay. Where an egg is perfectly fresh and only slightly soiled, a cloth dampened with vinegar may be used to clean it without harm, but it is better to eat that egg at once and not risk preserving it. Infertile eggs, that is, eggs that do not contain the germ of life, are more likely to keep well than fertile ones, and eggs laid in April, May and early June seem to do better than those laid later in the season. As to the time they may be kept, the experimenters have found that they will be in perfect condition for from eight months to a year, and that they may be used for all purposes for which fresh eggs are demanded. As the egg loses none of its content while in the preserving fluid, it should be pierced with a needle point at the larger end if it is to be boiled, otherwise the shell will crack with the heat expansion.

Given fifteen dozen clean, fresh eggs the silicate process requires a five-gallon crock or agate ware container and a quart of sodium silicate. Clean the crock thoroughly, scald till quite hot, wipe dry and allow to stand in the sun if convenient. Boil nine quarts of water, and allow it to cool, then add the sodium silicate, and stir well in the crock. Select a cool, dry place where the crock may stand and still be accessible till all the eggs are used, for it is not best to move it after the eggs are packed. Handle the eggs carefully in putting them into the solution and do not attempt to crowd them. Fill the crock till at least two inches of the solution stands above the top layer of eggs. Cover the crock with heavy oiled paper, tied firmly so as to exclude as much air as possible, for if the air is allowed to enter freely the water in the solution will evaporate and leave the eggs exposed before the storage period is completed. A larger crock and more eggs and solution may be used, but it is better to use two crocks. The solution must be thrown away after once used, and new provided for the next packing.

Sodium silicate ordinarily costs about thirty cents a quart, and as it is the only item of expense in the process, the preserving costs about two cents a dozen, not counting first cost of the crock, which is good till broken.

If sodium silicate is too expensive on account of war conditions or cannot be had, the lime process is recommended. It is the same in all details except that three pounds of unslacked lime is added to five gallons of water, prepared as for the sodium silicate process. After the lime has dissolved and settled to the bottom of the vessel, the eggs are packed as described, and the clear lime water poured over them. Some housewives add a pound of salt to the lime solution, but the scientific experimenters say the results are better without the salt.

So far as the records show, the water-glass or sodium and the lime-preserving processes have only been used domestically and mostly in the country. But the department sees commercial possibilities for dealers and producers in cities and towns. Persons who have long used processed eggs declare they are far better than those kept in cold storage, and even assert that they cannot be told from fresh eggs when put upon the table. With the Government limiting the use of ammonia for refrigeration, cold storage may be expensive and even prohibited, so that the merchant who has a cellar well stocked with processed eggs next Fall and Winter is likely to find his foresight profitable.

PIANOS NOT A NECESSITY

So Germans Can "Profiteer" in Them All They Like, Court Says.

Pianos are not "articles of daily necessity" and consequently nobody can be punished for "profiteering" in them, according to a decision of the Assessor's Court of the Central Berlin District reported in the Berliner Allgemeine Zeitung of March 6.

It appears that a piano dealer bought a second-hand piano from a locomotive engineer for 700 marks, ($166,) had it overhauled and resold it for 2,000 marks. This came to the knowledge of the War Anti-Extortion Bureau, which brought charges of profiteering in articles of necessity against the dealer.
